JOHN WANAMAKER'S EXAMPLE.

General Harrison's postmaster general, John Wanamaker, has set an example of patriotism which rarely has been equalled and which could not be excelled. First of all, he offers his personal services to the government upon the field of battle. He is no stay-at-home patriot. He says to others who would risk their lives for their country, "Come," not go. But he does not stop there. Far from it. He is one of the largest employers in the country, and here is the notice he has posted in his mammoth store in Philadelphia:

Notice—In order that our men may have easy minds in considering and arranging their affairs in the event of being called upon for military service, this notice is posted to say:

1. That all the positions thus vacated will be reopened to return to when the military service is over.
2. That all salaries will continue in full in such absence for actual service, and be paid to the authorized representative of their respective families.
3. An insurance to the amount of $1,000 will be paid by the firm in case of each death while any of our people are actually engaged in military service.

Money, like nature, "speaks a varied language," says the Inter Ocean. In this case it speaks the vernacular of patriotism, and that, with an eloquence rivaling the highest flights of the orator or statesman. Nor is this act of Mr. Wanamaker a momentary spasm, due to recent excitement. Some months ago another member of the Harrison cabinet, ex-Secretary of State Foster, went to Philadelphia at the request of the administration to make a plea for the Cuban relief fund.

He was given free access to the consular correspondence in the state department in the preparation of his speech. An immense audience awaited him, and he made a very strong presentation of the needs of the Cubans. Observing Mr. Wanamaker in the audience, he called upon him to speak at the close of his own address. In response Mr. Wanamaker took the position that the way to afford relief to the starving Cuban was to free the island from Spanish despotism. Then, for the first time in the evening, the audience became enthusiastic. The sudden silence which had prevailed during Mr. Foster's address was broken and a wild scene of cheering followed. Mr. Foster's object in calling out his friend and cabinet colleague was defeated. It was a striking case of building better than one knew. In justice, however, to Mr. Foster it should be added that he was well pleased with the turn the affair took, for his researches in preparing the address had convinced him that nothing short of the army and navy of the United States could afford effective relief to Cuba.

It was still another member of the Harrison cabinet, Senator Proctor, who by his speech on his personal observations in Cuba did so much to create the present public sentiment in favor of the Cubans. A fourth in the cabinet list, General Noble of
