PERSONAL MENTION

A FEW HINTS. The Eye is the Window of the Soul—Beware How You Use It.

When should spectacles first be used, and those in use abandoned? First—When you are obliged to move small objects to a considerable distance from the eye in order to see them distinctly.

Second—If you find it necessary to get more light than formerly—as for instance, to place the light between the eyes and the object.

Third—If, on looking at and attentively considering a near object, it becomes confused and appears to have a kind of mist before it.

Fourth—When the letters of a book or paper run together and appear to have doubled or trebled.

Fifth—If the eyes are fatigued by a little exercise so that you are obliged to shut them from time to time, or relieve them by looking at other objects.

Sixth—If black spots or flakes appear before the eyes or seem floating around the eyes.

Seventh—If the eyes become inflamed or heated or any other exercise.

If you observe any of the above signs or signals of distress, it should claim your immediate attention. The eye, like the rest of the body, slowly but surely reaches the acme—the meridian of its strength and perfection—then passes into a condition of weakness and decay.

When this stage arrives, we should avail ourselves of the aids that science and patient research has thrown in our way at so small an expense. When you find your old spectacles should be replaced by a new pair, it is always for a stronger pair, for our eyes never grow younger until we reach the stage of "second sight" in the somber twilight of old age.

Daut, the optician, knows just what you need in the line of glasses. Call on him.

"I've just been looking over a list of the New Yorkers who are descended from kings." "Well?" "Well, I infer that a man has to have at least a million before he can afford to be descended from a king."—Chicago Evening Post.

An Excellent Example.—"Yes, I belong to the new school of philosophy that inculcates a belief in the general futility of human research." "Can you show us any examples?" "Yes, I'm a member of a committee that's investigating trusts."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
