PAN-AMERICANISM TO DATE.

Step by step the pan-American idea of James G. Blaine is developing into an accomplished fact, says the inter-Ocean. The details of this plan may or may not be worked out. They do not matter. The essential unity of American interests is becoming a conviction common to all America. In the entire range of South American countries, all, with two exceptions, have given unmistakable signs of friendliness in recent years. The two exceptions are Chili and Argentine Republic. The latest evidence of this friendliness comes from Rio Janerio. A dispatch from that capital announces that the Brazilian Radicals are preparing to declare themselves in favor of the United States and opposed to Spain in the present conflict. The government of Brazil gave the most practical evidence of good will by selling to our government one of the best battleships of its navy, and that, too, when the war was so near that the sale verged upon an infringement of neutrality. Our relations with Brazil were always friendly, and when the republic was struggling for existence the United States rendered it signal service by a practical application of the Monroe Doctrine. European warships were sent there to afford aid and comfort to the monarchical rebels under Mello and Da Gama. Their malign influence was promptly and effectively checkmated by a formidable counter naval demonstration on the part of the United States. The great republic of Brazil has hardly, if any, less occasion to be grateful to our own government than has Venezuela.

The greater the influence of the United States in the affairs of American nations the better it will be for all America. That the Argentine Republic is unfriendly is due to the preponderance of foreign influence. In an evil hour that country ead a spasm of speculation and wild flatism. When the inevitable collapse came the European capitalists had a blanket mortgage on the country. The present attitude of Argentine toward the United States is due to this condition of bankruptcy and financial dependence. As for Chili, there was a time when it had a better navy than the United States, and it still cherishes an absurd ambition to dominate the rest of South America. Moreover, the Chilean government still remembers the day when it was brought to terms with Benjamin Harrison's ultimatum. The general and cordial good will of nearly all the other countries of this continent is a potent factor in enabling the United States to take and maintain its right place among the great powers of the world. The time seems near at hand when James G. Blaine's ideal of pan-American alliance will become an international reality.

The newspaper correspondents captured by the Spaniards in Cuba are to be exchanged for the Spanish officers captured by the United States. Governor-General Blanco has notified the government that he is not only willing but anxious to get rid of them, and that he will take any kind of Spanish officers in return for them.

It is said that Admiral Dewey when a boy was the terror of the nervous people in his native village because of his mischievous pranks, but the man who tells this specified that his full name should appear in connection with the story as an evidence of good faith.
