HERE'S TO THE OREGON.

Another great achievement must be credited to the American navy. Admiral Dewey proved the fighting capacity of the modern battleships. Captain Clark of the Oregon has shown they are good sailors. When the Oregon left San Francisco for the long journey around Cape Horn it was said no battleship should be put to so severe a test. It was argued that our great "floating batteries" were built for fighting, not for long voyages, and that to send the Oregon on a hurried trip of 14,000 miles was more than hazardous.

The battleship, the pride of our Pacific coast, started for the Atlantic squadron to make good the loss of the Maine. While she has been sailing down one side of the continent and up the other, the war has made rapid progress. Other warships, purchased abroad, have joined the Atlantic squadron in advance of her, but no one has been followed with such anxiety as the Oregon. Foes watched for her at strategic points, but she escaped them all.

The voyage of the Oregon is the most remarkable ever made by a battleship. The naval experts in Europe have watched the course of the Oregon with as much interest as they have watched the maneuvers of Admiral Sampson's fleet. If this highest type of the modern battleship could stand the strain of high speed for 14,000 miles and join the Atlantic squadron ready for battle an important point in naval architecture would be settled in favor of the new school.

The Oregon has been ready for battle every day for two weeks. She has been steaming toward her goal over a path beset by Spanish war vessels. She has been the objective point of two or more Spanish expeditions, intended to delay or capture her. But she has arrived in the Caribbean sea in time to join in the naval battle for which she was ordered from the Pacific to the Atlantic. She is a sailer and a fighter. May her shadow never grow less until she has shown the Spaniards the stuff of which she and her fighting men are made.

The present war has demonstrated at least that there is no division of popular sentiment with regard to the question of increasing our naval strength. Even political lines are lost sight of when the question of building up a great navy is discussed in congress now. That is one tremendous gain in our favor, and it must be counted, no matter what other results are attained in the war with Spain.

Weyler's brother, now a United States prisoner of war, threatens to reconcentrado himself to death, which, in view of all circumstances, is the proper thing for him to do. There is a universal feeling of regret in this country, however, that it isn't Weyler's brother's brother who is going to do it.

The Spaniards are blamed for regarding this country with unfeigned derision; but what would you think of a country whose flag was floated by a gunboat called Gussie, if you knew scarcely anything about its redeeming features.

For the benefit of those who do not understand Spanish it might be said that Boca Grande—one of the main channels in Manila harbor—means big mouth. Spain is celebrated for its boca grandes.
