GLADSTONE'S CAREER.

In the ninety years which spanned the life of Gladstone, the crown of England rested upon four heads. We gain a better comprehension of the range of this long and useful life by recalling the fact that Gladstone was a boy of 10 when George III, under whose reign the American colonies won their freedom, was gathered to the tomb of English mon- Sherman County, Oregon. archs. He was 6 years old when Napoleon was routed at Waterloo, and his marvelous memory distinctly recalled the thunder of British cannon in commemoration of that victory. "I heard the glass of the windows of the Royal hotel rattle to the guns of the eastle as they announced one of the great victories over Napoleon." During his lifetime, the premiership had twenty one changes, beginning with Portland, and ending with Salisbury, in the following order: Portland, Percival, Canning, Gode-

On the fall of the Disraeli ministry in 1880, Gladstone formed a ministry, and in 1881 passed the Irish land act. Four years later his government resigned, and he declined the queen's offer of an earldom. Salisbury succeeded him as prime minister, but a year later he came back into power, and pressed his Irish home rule bill on the commons. It was quickly defeated, and in 1887 Salisbury came back into power and held office until 1892, when Gladstone formed another ministry and drove his Irish home rule bill through the house of commons. The reform was rejected by the house of lords, and Gladstone was not strong enough with the country to force the lords Oysters in any style. to terms.

In 1894 he resigned the formal leadership of the liberal party, placed the reins of government in the hands of Lord Rosebery, and retired to private life. His great work was ended, and thenceforth until the end he passed the few remaining years in well-earned repose, though maintaining to the last a keen and advisory interest in the great affairs of
