WAR CORRESPONDENTS AND SOLDIERS.

A correspondent of the London Times describes the uniform of the American soldier as the ugliest on record. He states, with a good deal of positiveness, that the dress uniform was the work of tailors and politicians at Washington, and is better suited to the comic-opera stage than to the army.

In making this comment the correspondent pays a fine compliment to the discipline and fighting qualities of officers and men of our army. He believes that the discipline of our volunteer regiments answers the objection of the German military writers to the effect that American armies never can be as efficient as European armies because the men cannot be made into machines.

The correspondent of the London Times finds that the American soldiers are the better for not being mere machines, that they act with intelligence as well as precision, and he believes that this war with Spain may have great influence in convincing European governments that the best soldiers are not mere machines, but those who, like the American troops, act with intelligence, courage and purpose.

This tribute to the American soldier as he stands will make amends for the harsh criticism of the uniform. The truth is that the service uniform of the American soldier is one of the best, if not the best, in the world. There is nothing tawdry about it, no artificiality; but it is simple, in good taste, and well suited to operations in the field. There is no finer military figure than the American officer or private in his service uniform of blue. The dress or parade uniform was changed after the civil war, not by tailors and politicians, but by army officers who had studied the picturesque features of uniforms in France and Germany. The present uniform was adopted under regulations of 1881, and modified by general orders up to and including those of May 5, 1888. It may not be as soldierly as the service uniform—no dress uniform is—but it was certainly built upon military models in vogue in Europe. That is probably the worst thing that can be said against it.

The fact that English, German and French papers have sent correspondents, or at least representatives, into the field with the American troops, and that most of these are fair-minded, is encouraging. They will inform Europe as to a good many points that have hitherto received very little attention. The genuine army correspondent will write of men and events such as the great war correspondents wrote of the battles of our civil war and of the Franco-Prussian war.

There will be in the field hundreds who never will become war correspondents, with comprehension of military movements or appreciation of fighting qualities and courage. But the people will soon learn which correspondents have a capacity rightly to describe strategic or other movements in the field.

The correspondents from Europe are men who have been in the habit of writing about English or German or French armies, and we may expect some little show of prejudice; but in the end the instincts of the war correspondent will compel recognition of generalship and soldierly quality.
