OUR FIGHTING POWER.

The London Spectator does not agree with the European critics who believe that the United States has lost prestige by slowness in the war against Spain. "The effect of the slowness of the war," says the Spectator, "if it is to be a slow one, will be an immense increase of American fighting power, especially as regards the armaments which can be used at once." This will be the effect of the war, whether it be short or long. The necessity for a strong navy has been demonstrated, and the measures before congress contemplate a great increase of our fighting power on the sea. Our manufacturing and armories have struck the war gait, and are now turning out arms and ammunition at a rate that will keep our armies in the field fully supplied.

The question of armament was a serious one a few months ago, but the people could not be made to see it in that light. It is less serious now because the people have been brought to see the matter in the right light. They know that a mere call for 125,000 volunteers does not make an army. They realize what it is to be without arms or equipments for men ready to enter the field, and they realize as they never realized before the folly of a false economy that leaves a nation, that ought to be strong in peace or war, wholly unprepared for war.

Not all the evils of unpreparedness are found in the army and navy. People unused to preparations for war have no comprehension of what preparation means, and are liable to become impatient under the lashings of self-appointed critics who know less than the people themselves. Such critics, posing as the friends of suffering soldiers, or as correspondents eager to give the people information, may become mischief makers, doing the country and the cause as much injury as the enemy's spies or paid agents. What shall be said, for example, of a correspondent who reports that the blockade of Cuban reports is so ineffective that ships loaded with provisions pass into Havana harbor without being molested by the blockading fleet? That is a point that Spain is straining every nerve to establish, and here comes an American giving aid to the enemy on a most important point. Any man with any comprehension of war or of the gravity of the situation would not make such a mistake.

But the new generation is learning, and fortunately there are in every community, North and South, many who have not forgotten the lessons of war learned two generations ago. The inevitable outcome of the war will be, as the London Spectator says, "an immense increase of American fighting power."

Our esteemed contemporary, the St. Petersburg Novosti, demanding the termination of the war, says that "America must voluntarily submit her pretensions to a tribunal of the powers." "Must" and "voluntarily" are words which do not exist in the English language. The Novosti should not confound the United States with Japan. We do not fight wars here for "the powers" to settle, and we betray no secret when we inform our excited St. Petersburg contemporary that, while we may be sadly looking in awe of that high-sounding phrase, we do not care a continental for "the powers."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Whooping Cough.

I had a little boy who was nearly dead from an attack of whooping cough. My neighbors recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I did not think that any medicine would help him, but after giving him a few doses of the remedy I noticed an improvement, and one bottle cured him entirely. It is the best cough medicine I ever had in the house.—P. E. Moore, South Burgettstown, Pa. For sale by Blakeley & Houghton.
