FRUITS OF THE WAR.

The policy adopted by the stronger nations of Europe in the Hispano-American war is in sharp contrast with the principle for which that war is waged. Continental Europe, having had demonstrated to its satisfaction that American armies and navies are immeasurably superior to the Spanish, are dropping their shallow pretense of sympathy for the under dog and are beginning to side more openly with the stronger fighter. Utter selfishness predominates the monarchies of continental Europe, and it should be a warning to Americans who sneer at the idea of an Anglo-American alliance. Whatever objections exist to that idea of strength will be modified in the future. Were America the weaker power, these same nations would stand ready to rend our possessions and divide the fragments.

America espoused the cause of the weaker when she sent her fleets and armies to Cuba and the Philippines. It will later be demonstrated to the world that no grain of selfishness entered into the calculations of the men who declared the war for justice and liberty. It will also be demonstrated that the English-speaking race is to predominate in the world's affairs; that the oppressed can appeal with more safety to the generosity of the Anglo-Saxon than to the Latin race. The war is not without its benefits to America, aside from the satisfaction of giving freedom to wretched and down-trodden peoples. It will place her in a position to demand respect for the flag wherever it waves. The citizen traveling in the old world can now with safety rely upon the protection of Old Glory, where a few years ago he was wont to look to the protection of England's sturdy banner.

The demands of a minister of the United States will be equivalent to commands. We shall possess that influence among nations which others have required centuries to obtain, our commerce will grow accordingly, and the wealth of our people will ultimately be increased in far greater proportion than before the war. It will be proof positive that in one case "virtue brings its own reward."

SPANIARDS IN WAR.

A theory is current to the effect that the American troops in Cuba have met a disagreeable surprise in the fighting qualities of the Spaniards. There is nothing in this theory. Every American soldier of any experience knew long before the invasion of Cuba that the Spaniards were good fighters. As a matter of fact, the Spanish nation has had in recent years more experience in fighting, more experience in all sorts of war, than any other European country.

From 1867 to 1878 Spain, as well as Cuba, was in a disturbed state. In Spain large armies were almost constantly in the field under able commanders, fighting against the Carlists, and in Cuba Spanish officers and soldiers had a long campaign against the insurrectionists. This experience brought out all the military instincts of the people. It developed the fighting qualities, but it also stimulated a restiveness and a revolutionary spirit not conducive to discipline.

The Spaniard, whether he was in the army or in the navy, was on the lookout for pronouncements. The Spaniard was ready to fight Spaniard or any one else at the drop of the hat, and he was not overparticular as to method. All these characteristics the Spanish soldiers of today retain, but they have not the spirit or the staying qualities of the men who know just what they are fighting for.

No American soldier underrated the fighting qualities of the Spanish army in Cuba or at home, because all the soldiers of the regular army were fully informed and they expected hot work in the beginning of the campaign.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, 75c.
