A CURSE TO THE COUNTRY

Every day brings new evidence of the scandalous part played by the sensational newspapers of this country in the present war. Ever since the war began our government has been hampered, our army discouraged, and our national reputation blackened abroad by the ignorant or irresponsible correspondents who have been sent to the front by equally ignorant or irresponsible editors. In the last three months it is safe to say these agents of a depraved press have done more to damage our government, our generals, and our admirals in the eyes of the world than all the newspapers of the European continent.

Perhaps the most conspicuous of such offenders against public decency have been Poultney Bigelow, Richard Harding Davis and Sylvester Scovel. While the army was still at Tampa, Bigelow wrote a letter charging our officers with incompetence, our troops with lack of discipline, and our commissariat with demoralization. There was absolutely no excuse for this except that Bigelow might desire to bring his name prominently before the public and to show his employers his ability to advertise their publications throughout the country. He knew that he was harassing the United States government; he knew that, as far as in him lay, he was winning friends in Europe for Spain; he knew that he was slandering our army and disheartening our people; yet, in the interests of yellow journalism, he published his letter.

That letter was re-published broadcast in Europe and led some of the ablest strategists at once to compare the United States with France before the collapse at Metz. In Germany it was said that Mr. Bigelow's "exposure" justified the belief that our soldiers were even more incompetent-handled than those of Spain.

Apparently envious of Bigelow's laurels, Richard Harding Davis came forward at a still more critical juncture with an equally disreputable attack on our army. When our troops had pressed on without artillery or wagons, and, at great sacrifice, had carried the outposts near Santiago, this undereducated and underbred tuft hunter gave rein to his imagination and under the spur of wounded vanity and petty resentment wrote a villainous screed on General Shafter. He accused our general in command of incompetence, of cruelty, of indifference to the welfare of the army, and of criminal negligence in the discharge of his duty. This pack of lies was telegraphed to Europe by the Associated Press and published just at the moment when European judgment was hanging in the balance. Had Davis betrayed our military secrets to the enemy he could not have done the country equal harm. His conduct was worse than treason, yet we have not heard that his newspaper employer has discharged him, or even disciplined him.

It was reserved, however, for Sylvester Scovel to descend to the lowest depths of yellow journalism in the present war. Because he was not allowed to make himself conspicuous when our flag was raised over Santiago, he walked up to the American commander and tried to slap him in the face. Had a French or German correspondent done the same thing under similar circumstances he would have been shot or bayoneted on the spot, and few would have said that he did not deserve his fate.

For years the sensational journals of the American press have been going from bad to worse, and they had become the curse of the country long before the war began. Now they have revealed themselves, not only as the exponents of moral degradation, but as the organs of open treason. They presume not only to pry into the secrets of the family, to dictate the course of financiers, and to tyrannize society, but also to prescribe policies to our statesmen, to command obedience from our soldiers, and to exact humble deference from our generals and admirals.—Inter Ocean.
