FRIDAY - SEPTEMBER 9, 1898

The president's order returning the enfeebled regulars of the Fifth army corps to the military posts in the west and northwest whence they were called to southern rendezvous in the spring and to Cuba in the early summer, is both wise and considerate. The same may be said of the decision of the war department to grant furloughs to all volunteers who were engaged in the Santiago campaign. The bracing air of the higher altitudes cannot fail to act as a tonic to the enfeebled soldiers, while a furlough of sixty days, with its possibilities in home-coming and care, will put the men to whom it is extended in condition to meet any emergency that may arise later on from the acquisition of new territory. While the big camp at Montauk is one great hospital, only a portion of it is recognized as such, and the accommodations, especially in the food supply, are not equal to the necessities of sick and exhausted men. Thousands of the feeble men now quartered there have homes to which they can go, where they will be put upon nourishing diet and ministered to by competent and willing hands. The sooner all of this class are sent home the better both for themselves and their less fortunate comrades, who, not having homes to go to, will by this means be relieved from the discomfort due to overcrowding and receive more attention from doctors and nurses.—Oregonian.

The Havana newspaper, Diaro de la Marina, is mistaken in assuming that "annexation, independence, an American protectorate and a Spanish protectorate" are the alternatives which are to be submitted to the Cuban people. A Spanish protectorate is an impossibility. When Spain evacuates Cuba a few months hence her connection with the island ends immediately and forever. The only alternatives which present themselves are annexation and independence, though independence would involve, for a long time, a United States protectorate. When the Cubans a few months hence, under the supervision of the United States' military authority, but without any pressure from that authority, make their choice of the sort of government they want, they will vote for annexation or for independence. All the indications point to an overwhelming victory for annexation.

The Klondike Nugget, one of the two papers published at Dawson, laments over the trouble of finding its town subscribers, who pay $24 a year for the privilege of getting a semi-weekly edition. A paragraph in a recent issue explains the difficulty by saying that it is very hard to find some of the houses recording to addresses left at the office. Among those mentioned were "the cabin with the screen door," "the slab house facing the river," "the big tent with two stove pipes," and "the cabin three doors south of where all the dogs are."

Admiral Montojo congratulates himself on having got away from Dewey with a pennant, breech plugs and the money in the safe. After a sea fight with Uncle Sam the Spanish seem pleased to find anything in the nature of relics.

Some doubt is expressed as to whether it is Columbus or his son, Diego, who is buried at Havana. The explorer in his old age was treated badly by Spain, and did not want to be buried in that country. The issue, however, is not one upon which the United States will take sides.

The loss of the navy during the war with Spain was fifteen killed, forty-three wounded, a marvelously small list in view of the fact that thirty five Spanish ships were destroyed in action. The health of the 28,000 men in the American navy has been remarkably good.

One of the first things the Spanish peace commissioners will discover is that no door exists by which any other than the two nations concerned can enter the discussion about the Philippines. That question will be settled by the United States and Spain, no more.

Make a Note of It.

It's a good thing to remember that there are many kinds of drugs; good, bad and indifferent. Drugs are important. Inferior drugs may not only fail to cure, but may prove worse than the original trouble. Purity of drugs is our hobby. They're the only kind fit to use.
