Monday and Tuesday evenings will no doubt find the Baldwin opera house crowded to hear the Tennessee Students, for our people are partial to good singing, and there is where they will hear it. The price, which is but twenty-five cents for any part of the house, is the cheapest ever paid for an entertainment of such merit. Hear the four original jubilees and the other four as well.

Tonight will be your last opportunity to hear the Wizard Oil Company, as their engagement closes with this evening's program. They promise the best entertainment yet given, and will give away more presents than usual. Improve this last chance of hearing them.

At 7:30 yesterday morning the tolling of the bells at St. James' cathedral and the House of the Convent, in Vancouver announced the death of Rev. Louis de G. Schram, vicar-general to Right Rev. A little over a week ago he suffered a relapse in the form of a hemorrhage, from which he never recovered.

The Wizard Oil Company will close their engagement at the Baldwin Opera House tonight. Don't fail to see them. The admission is only fifteen cents to any part of the house, and they have an extra fine program for this closing concert. Besides they will give away many fine silver presents. We advise our readers to go early tonight and get a good seat. The doors will be open at 7:00. Show commences at 8:00 sharp. Be sure and see them. This is your last chance.

New Feature in Bowling.

Interest is awakening in bowling circles as the winter months come on, and a great deal of sport in that line is anticipated. At the club last night something a little out of the common method of carrying on a game was initiated. A "three-cornered" or "handicap medal tournament" was begun, in which any member can take part, handicaps being allowed in accordance with the expertness of the players. These games will be played every Friday evening, the team winning carrying the medal for the week. If the same team wins the medal for three consecutive weeks it is theirs for "keeps." The following players took part last night: Ogden, G. Bonn and F. Bayley, with a total score of 464; Van Norden, De Huff and Sampson, score 513; Nolan, Schmidt and Sinnott, score 494; Riddell, Houghton and Menefee, score 479. The team composed of Van Norden, De Huff and Sampson making the highest score, carried away the palm for this coming week.

VERY SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

A Stranger Is Found on the Track Badly Hurt.

This morning as a track-walker was walking along about three miles east of the city he saw a man pass him and cross three mile trestle. As he had his hands clasped and acted queerly, he overtook him, and finding that he had been injured, returned to the city with him.

Marshal Lauer was called and took him to the city jail, when Dr. Hollister was summoned and upon examining his wounds discovered that he had been badly injured. A deep gash, somewhat in the shape of a Y, was found on his head, causing concussion of the brain. His shoulder and back were hurt and his hands bruised. Today he refused nourishment, and the doctor fears for his recovery.

It has been difficult to find out anything definite concerning the accident, as the patient is not in a condition to give any account of it, at one time saying one thing and at another time another. His name is P. F. Feazelle, and he claims he was on his way to Montana. When first interviewed he said he had been sand-bagged and robbed of nine dollars; but being questioned later said he had been sitting on the track and an engine struck him.

Marshal Lauer, after making an examination of the place where he was found, thinks it more than likely that he was either walking the track and attempted to board the train, or was sitting on the edge of the track and was struck by the engine. He is positive there was no foul play.

COLORADO VS. OREGON.

A Few Comparisons—Oregon Still in the Lead Is Found to Be the Unanimous Verdict.

Upon starting on the tour of Colorado, the Oregon delegation determined to be unprejudiced and make no comparisons, that is, in public. What a serious task we had given ourselves not one of the party imagined until we began to reach the mountainous regions, and then as the saying goes, it was like "pulling eye teeth" to keep from expressing our thoughts, and often we found ourselves saying, "along the Columbia in Oregon", and the remainder of the observation was drowned in the loudness of the praises sang by Eastern delegations whenever a small hill was sighted. Not that we would call Colorado's grand mountains hills, for are they not higher than ours, and some of them as majestic? None would gainsay this fact, although from the elevation from which they are viewed they do not appear nearly so high, and to those accustomed to our grand snow-capped peaks standing like hoary-headed sentinels so far above us, we are compelled to say they seem but insignificant.

For instance, Manitou is 6,629 feet above the sea level, and Pike's Peak towering 7,513 feet higher, loses some of its loftiness when it is compared with our grand old Hood and Adams, the former lifting its snowy head about 11,215 feet above us. Then the many ragged mountains in close proximity detract from its stateliness, and caused an Oregon haysced to quietly ask: "Say, which is Pike's Peak?" The scarcity of snow also makes it less attractive. In fact this wonder of "the Switzerland of the West" cannot be compared to any of our snowy peaks. The wonder is not so much in the work of Nature in this state (although she has been lavish) but in the genius of man, displayed to such a remarkable degree in his maneuverings to conquer what Nature has made so difficult of attainment, that is, the possibility of conveying the tourist up the steep grades, over the winding curves, through tunnels, and over precipices, until not an iota of the grandeur of the scenery of the state is missed. Had Oregon such roads, over which the tourists could ride and behold what now is seen only by the solitary sheep-herder or an occasional traveler on horse-back, nowhere could eight-seers find anything to compare with a tour of our state. Indeed, many who have made the trip up the Columbia on the boat from Portland or over the now famous O. R. & N.

The prices of "cheap" tea, coffee, soda, baking powder, flavoring extracts and spices are lower than prices of Schilling's Best. True; so is the quality.

place this short stretch of scenery ahead of anything they have ever seen.

While on our trip, in conversation with a tourist who had traveled the United States over in search of grand scenery, he remarked, "And you are fortunate enough to live on that grand stream, the Columbia; I shall never forget my trip from Portland to 'Dalles' over that wonderful road the O. R. & N. Never have I beheld such mountains, such a river and so many beautiful falls. I fairly held my breath when the train stopped at one (from his description Multnomah) and allowed a few moments in which to stand in awe." Often do we hear such remarks, which lead us to believe it is not all prejudice which causes comparison to be made. Where in Colorado can be found a place where one can behold five snow-capped peaks from one point of view? And yet just across the Columbia river from the Klickitat hills may be seen Hood, Adams, Ranier, Jefferson, St. Helens and the Three Sisters, standing out in bold relief, seemingly defying competition.

But we have confined ourselves alone to mountains, saying nothing of the valleys, and to the scenery as viewed from Eastern Oregon. Well, that is sufficient. We cannot do justice to the grandeur of our own section, and therefore will not attempt to trespass further. We can, however say without fear of contradiction, that Oregon is destined to be the Mecca of tourists, for her reputation in that line is already made. She only requires that the civil engineer try his skillful hand and brain in her behalf to make the world resound with praises of the wonderful things which Nature has done for her.
