ALGERIAN METHODS.

Two "sons of their fathers" have been discharged from the army. They are Captain Alger, son of the secretary of war, who has been serving in the rank of assistant adjutant-general, and Captain McMillan, son of the administration United States senator from Michigan, who has been serving as assistant quartermaster.

It was appointments of this character, made solely on political and family considerations, which led to the frightful abuses of the war department during the recent war. The service was loaded up with these young sprigs, while officers of life-long training were held in retirement.

An example of this gross discrimination is under the eye of the Spokane public. Major W. H. Miller is one of the most efficient officers in the quartermaster's department. He has trained for a soldier, and has had long experience, having been graduated from West Point in 1872. He was not allowed to take any part in the war, but was kept here in charge of the construction of a new army post—work of considerable importance in time of peace, but of small consequence in time of actual warfare.

He was kept in the background in order that political and family favorites might be pushed to the front as young Alger and young McMillan and scores of others were pushed to the front and entrusted with duties for which they were unfitted—duties upon which hung the lives of our soldiers and the very existence of our armies.

If Alger had been a man of strong character he would not have given an appointment to his son. He would have understood that in so doing he gave every place-hunting politician a twist upon his administration. When senators and others of influence came asking for the appointment of their sons and nephews, he could not shut them off with the statement that nepotism, which is bad in peace, becomes almost criminal in time of war.

It is refreshing to contrast with Alger's low course the patriotic conduct of Thomas Jefferson. Writing on March 27, 1801, to his kinsman, George Jefferson, he says:

"The public will never be made to believe that the appointment of a relative is made on the ground of merit alone, uninfluenced by family views; nor can they ever see, with approbation, offices, the disposal of which they trust to their presidents for public purposes, divided out as family property. Mr. Adams degraded himself infinitely by his conduct on the subject, as General Washington had done himself the greatest honor. With two such examples to proceed by, I should be doubly inexcusable to err."

During the recent war the country has seen a scandalous "dividing out of offices as family property."—Spokesman-Review.

Corn may be put to more uses than any other product of the farm, and now comes an Eastern manufacturer who is turning out a fabric made from the oil of corn which, it is claimed, will soon be running neck and neck with the rubber product of the country.

So acute have the relations between England and France become that the marine and life insurance companies of England are inserting war-risk clauses in their policies. This does not mean, however, that the companies expect war. With them, as with the French, the belief is general that only the unexpected happens.

Three Doctors in Consultation. From Benjamin Franklin.

"When you are sick, what you like best is to be chosen for a medicine in the first place; what experience tells you is best, to be chosen in the second place; what reason (i. e., Theory) says is best is to be chosen in the last place. But if you can get Dr. Inclination, Dr. Experience and Dr. Reason to hold a consultation together, they will give you the best advice that can be taken."

When you have a bad cold Dr. Inclination would recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy because it is pleasant and safe to take. Dr. Experience would recommend it because it never fails to effect a speedy and permanent cure. Dr. Reason would recommend it because it is prepared on scientific principles, and acts on nature's plan in relieving the lungs, opening the secretions and restoring the system to a natural and healthy condition. For sale by Blakeley & Houghton.
