WEYLERISM OR MCKINLEYISM

There is no longer any mystery about the dilatory tactics of the Spanish commissioners at the Paris conference. It is not a mere case of "manana," doing nothing today which can be put off until tomorrow. It is rather a subterfuge of diplomacy. Spain won no victories on land or sea and can hope to win none. Neither was she able to summon any of the powers of Europe, great or small, to her help, but an ally has been found right here in the United States. Negotiations are hindered in the hope that the Democratic party will win the November elections.

Nowhere will the election returns be awaited with such feverish anxiety as in Madrid. Sagasta and his cabinet, the Queen Regent, and the Cortes know perfectly well that a defeat of the American administration is their one forlorn hope. Such defeat would be interpreted everywhere as a popular rebuke of our war policy and a demand that the fruits of victory be thrown away.

While the war fever was coming on the people were eager and united, but now that hostilities have been suspended and a chance given for sober second thought how do the American people feel? Do they still stand by the president and his expansion policy? An old Spanish proverb says that republics and weathercocks are alike fickle, and Spain's own Republican episode of a few years ago has evidently emphasized this proverb at Paris.

The Spanish conferees at the French capital are waiting for what next week Tuesday will bring forth. The best known American state, New York, has in the field for governor, Theodore Roosevelt, whose name is familiar to every Castilian Hidalgo. He and his rough riders were the picturesque and sensational feature of our army in Cuba. His defeat would be hailed at Madrid as a glorious victory for Spain. It would be the next thing to a similar humiliation for Dewey. No other land soldier stands out with such distinctness as the colonel of the rough riders. But still more distinct is the composite picture of congress. A Democratic majority in that body would fire the Spanish heart as nothing else could except the destruction of our fleet now in Manila bay. It would be accepted at Madrid as proof that the Americans want McKinley thwarted in his expansion policy. That is the interpretation which would be put by every European court upon a general Democratic victory. Intervention then would menace us and perhaps necessitate a renewal of hostilities on a larger and bloodier scale than ever.

In view of all this nothing could be more timely than the danger signal Mr. Frederick W. Seward has just hung out. "Most of us," he says in a letter to the New York Tribune, "are assuming that the war is over. That is not the Spanish view. Does any Spanish general or statesman admit that the war is definitely concluded? No; he says there is a suspension of hostilities. He has no desire or expectation of gaining anything more by fighting, but he believes that much may be retrieved by diplomacy that was lost by fighting." Mr. Seward adds that a Democratic victory would be interpreted as an American backdown, the repudiation of our policy as to war and its result, and that for this reason "Spain would wave her banners of blood and gold" over what she would construe to be a Spanish victory, the more acceptable because it would be her first one of the war. This is a statement of the case worthy the senior Seward in his best days. Reduced to its final analysis the question of next week Tuesday for each voter in the United States is this: Shall I vote for Sagasta and Weyler or McKinley and Dewey? --Inter-Ocean.

Prominent citizens of Missouri have become interested in behalf of young Jesse James. The interest which prominent citizens of Missouri exhibited in the father of this young man cost the state, according to the estimate of leading citizens of St. Louis, an incalculable amount of money. In fact, Missouri hasn't recovered from it yet.
