AMERICANS IN THE FAR EAST

The notable feature of the consular reports now submitted to congress is the bright outlook for Oriental commerce. The report from Hong Kong, England's door to China, emphasizes two points in connection with our trade at that port during the first half of the year.

It might be thought that this would only be a temporal advantage, and, in a sense, it is, but some of the goods brought into the market to meet the special demand are consumed by the natives, or by other foreigners, and this sampling tends to create a steady demand.

Previous to this calendar year Americans exported to those markets a little flour and a good deal of kerosene, and not much else. The flour crossed the Pacific mostly in British ships, the kerosene was tanked over the Atlantic through the Mediterranean sea and the Suez canal.

Still another encouraging sign is the demand for our cheaper grades of raw cotton. The report on this head is full of promise for the south, provided only the voyage were shortened and cheapened as it would be by the Nicaragua canal.

One would not think that war taxes tended to the employment of additional labor, but in one case at least they have started a factory, and in this way, the war tax on beer caused the brewers to advance the price. The saloon-keepers couldn't stand the raise, so they had new glasses made, and this started one Indiana factory in full.

We are making progress in all directions. The merchants of Santiago, through their chamber of commerce, are acting up to their privileges as American citizens and making recommendations as to tariff and revenue.

of the Spanish cruisers sunk on the 1st of May, and has sent them to Hong Kong to be fully repaired for active service. The open door policy as to the Philippines finds few friends among the senators and members of congress.
