THE PRESIDENT DOWN SOUTH

The president has strengthened his administration by his southern journey, which has been managed with exceptional tact. His reception in the southern cities was in the nature of an ovation, and he has been careful and fortunate, in all his speeches, to tickle the southern vanity. His utterances have been felicitous and patriotic, and at times have risen to the dignity of simple and unaffected eloquence.

If Mr. Bryan and other critics of the expansion policies of the administration are prudent, they will take a lesson from these southern demonstrations. The southern character is adventurous. It is charged with the pioneer spirit. It will not be frightened off by the bugaboo of so-called "imperialism." Its devotion to the Union can not be questioned, and its young blood leaps with quickened energy at the thought of great national policies which promise to increase the country's power and embellish the glory of American citizenship.

Events of the past week have proved that President McKinley has a keener insight into the southern character than has Mr. Bryan. He has shown a readiness and a willingness to meet upon their own health the southern leaders who oppose expansion, and as a result he has the south shouting at his back. Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier-Journal was quick to catch the true spirit of the southern people on this great question. Mr. Watterson has been in close touch with southern sentiment for half a century, and no one knows it better. He is a pronounced advocate of expansion.

Mr. Bryan is falling into a grievous mistake when he arrays himself against the broad policies of the administration. The American people are not finding fault with these policies. They have spoken sharply against much that was inexcusably wrong in the management of the war, but they approve the objects of the war, and the statesmanlike way in which the president has dealt with the conquered foe.—Spokesman Review.

A SILLY WOMAN'S TALK.

Objection on the part of the war authorities to the service of women in the any relation to the army is due chiefly to such hysterical exhibitions as that made by a Red Cross nurse, Miss Schafer, in the statement printed in our telegraphic columns on Thursday. According to this silly woman's chatter, the troops at Manila are in the most dreadful straits—dying by dozens, seeking by suicide to rid themselves of their miseries, waiting and praying for the relief of death. By the same steamer which brought this woman came the most cheerful reports. Mr. Dodson, a young man who went out from the Oregonian office, a trained observer, enjoying—by permission of his officers in condition of his character as a reporter—special opportunities for seeing all that goes on. writes pleasantly of athletic competitions and of other agreeable things as occupying the spare time and surplus energies of the troops. It is impossible that any such condition as Miss Schafer describes should escape the notice of this keen professional observer, who is especially charged to report the truth to this journal.

A contradiction of Miss Schafer's statements, even more direct, comes in a letter printed yesterday, written from a military hospital at Manila by Stanton L. Double to his mother, Mrs. M. Double, 57 Ella street, this city. He says:

We get fairly good grub here, and sleep on wire-spring cots with mattress, sheets, pillow case, pillow and blanket on each one, and a little table and chair near each. The building that we are in was used before it was taken charge of by the United States as a sort of convent and girls' school, and is a very fine building, about a mile from our quarters, and outside the walled city. Only three or four days after I went in the hospital a lot of us were taken for a ride on the bay in a steam launch... I got liquid diet for a few days, which consisted of a small amount of either beef tea, chicken broth, cold milk, chocolate for the regular meals, and eggnog once in the forenoon and once in the afternoon. After being on liquid diet for three or four days, I was changed to light diet, which consisted principally of a little dish of rice, oatmeal, tapioca and instead of one of these would get an egg on a piece of chicken; and with each meal we also got either a light biscuit or three crackers and a little wine after each meal. The hospital I am now in is the convalescent hospital, where I have been about two weeks. All that are sent here are supposed to be over their fever, etc., but who need to gain strength and flesh.

Here is a report of a sick boy to his mother—a report entirely privileged and confidential—made after having seen the inside of two hospitals. We make it emphatic because there are just now some thousands of anxious parents, brothers, sisters, sweethearts and friends to whom such reports as that made by Miss Schafer cause the deepest anxiety and agony.

Two Pointed Questions Answered.

What is the use of making a better article than your competitor if you can not get a better price for it?

Ans.—As there is no difference in the price the public will buy only the better, so that while our profits may be smaller on a single scale they will be much greater in the aggregate.

How can you get the public to know your make is the best?

If both articles are brought prominently before the public both are certain to be tried and the public will very quickly pass judgment on them and use only the better one.

This explains the large sale on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The people have been using it for years and have found that it can always be depended upon. They may occasionally take up with some fashionable novelty put forth with exaggerated claims, but are certain to return to the one remedy that they know to be reliable, and for coughs, colds and croup there is nothing equal to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.
