THE PRESIDENT AT BOSTON.

President McKinley's Boston address is the strongest state paper he has yet given to the nation.

The address starts with a fair reminder that many who now protest against the nation's acceptance of the solemn obligations and consequences of the late war with Spain were impulsive in demanding that the country should hurry into that action.

The president is severe on Senator Hoar and others who have been loosely spouting about what the United States should and should not do in the Philippines.

"If we knew everything by intuition," says the president, "and I sometimes think there are those who believe that if we do not, they do—we should not need information, but unfortunately most of us are not in that happy state."

The president states his policy with great force and clearness. "The whole subject is now with congress, and congress is the voice, the conscience and the judgment of the American people."

This is broad, liberal statesmanship, and its calm, firm definition is refreshing after the hysteria the country has had from some of the members of the United States senate.

Here are the sentiments of one of our subscribers, who is a whole-souled Republican, and therefore a true patriotic American citizen. He says: "The patriot, John Adams, in a speech in 1792, said: 'The tree of liberty will shoot its top to the sun; its boughs will hang over the ends of the world, and wearied nations will rest under its shade.' We say, welcome and prosperity to our new American colonies, everyone of them—Hawaii, Porto Rico, Philippines and Cuba. Welcome into the dominion of the grand American republic. Here is to expansion, acquisition and duplication. Growth is the healthy order of nature and nations."

The smallest things may exert the greatest influence. De Witt's Little Early Risers are unequalled for overcoming constipation and liver trouble.
