In regard to fruit trees, it will be well for orchardists to heed the advice of Mr. A. H. Buckman, given in a local column of the Oregonian, and withhold the ax from the fruit trees until the spring is well advanced. There is no question that fruit trees generally received severe handling from the freeze of the first week of February, and that in some localities many have been killed. But it will be wise to gve all a chance to raily. Otherwise tuel may be inadvertently made of very valuable timber and a large part of the fruit crop for the next five years needlessly sacrificed.
