MAKING CUBA AMERICAN.

It is apparent that the Cubans generally are eager for the departure of the American troops and for an opportunity to form a government of their own with power to raise money by taxation and the use of the public credit. But they must not be too urgent or impetuous about this matter. They must keep in mind the exact terms of the pledge adopted by congress. The resolution runs thus: "The United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the control of the island to its people." Before we withdraw there must be unquestioned pacification and a government ordained by the whole people of the island, not by one province, or two, but by the whole six. The pressure brought to bear through the Cuban press to hurry our departure is already more strenuous than circumstances warrant, or than is consistent with our national pledge.

The Cubans do not see one of the most serious troubles ahead, and that is the danger of quarreling among themselves on both provincial and racial lines. A large Spanish element remains in Cuba. It is used to authority and well acquainted with the weak as well as the strong characteristics of the Cubans. It will count for as much as possible in the future of the island, influencing the government and retarding its Americanization. Then the different provinces are not harmonious. Santiago is much displeased over the order to send a part of its revenue to Havana. Foreign property must be protected, and it will be a nice question to decide when our responsibility in that regard can end. Cuba must first be pacified. Then its people, all of them, can select their government. We are as much pledged to this consummation as we are to withdraw. That Cuba in time will be Americanized is certain, no matter what government it selects. American business energy will find there a permanent and legitimate field, and will be properly protected.—Globe-Democrat.

The government very wisely gives Dewey everything that he asks. The reason the government does this is because it knows he will not ask for anything except what he needs. The public does not know exactly what were the "political reasons" he had in mind, when he wanted the Oregon to be hurried to him, but the Oregon is steaming in his direction all the same, and the people are pleased. In one important particular Dewey is like Grant. Grant asked the government for very little, but that little was needed when he asked for it, and it was always promptly furnished. The government and the people have unlimited confidence in Dewey.

Spain has nothing to gain by giving aid and comfort to the Filipinos. A small fraction of renegade Americans started out a month or two ago to help Aguinaldo, but the frequency with which adversity hits that conspirator recently has terrified his friends on this side of the water into silence. Fate is against Aguinaldo, and Spain can well afford to be guided by the example of his American admirers and quit giving him any moral support. His days in the land are numbered.
