MUST CAPTURE AGUINALDO.

From the cable accounts of the fighting at Manila, it would appear that Aguinaldo must presently prepare to do the "last stand" act that is so popular with the leaders of a lost cause, says the Spokesman-Review. At last accounts the insurgents were fleeing toward Malolos where Aguinaldo has his strongest force-perphaps to protect his precious hide-and a battle in that vicinity may be looked for before long. It is the evident policy of the Americans to press the fighting vigorously from this on in order to end the revolution before the hot and rainy season is at its height and hence all possible speed will doubtless be made in chasing the Filipinos to their lair.

Perhaps the best thing that could now happen would be an early battle at Malolos, the defeat there of the Filipinos and the capture of Aguinaldo. The wily leader of the insurgents, however, may clude capture, but his taking would mean more than several victorious engagements The Dalles, to the American arms. With Aguimaldo secure the revolutionary party would disintegrate. It has not appeared that the cabinet with which Aguinaldo has surrounded himself is a strong one, so aggressive or so able as himself. While he has shown himself a scoundrel and a bribe taker, a "soldier of fortune" and an adventurer, it can not be demed that he is possessed of mental attainments far above the ordinary. The natives at 7 a.m., and arrive at destination in smple time for outgoing trains. have rallied about him rather than about the party of which he is the head. With him out of the way the backbone of the revolution would be gone. The natives would surrender to the superior force, go back to the reservation, as it were, and agree to be "good Indians." Aguinaldo, however, must be captured or chased out of the country; captured preferably. To accomplish that end will require great strategy, for the insurgent president and commanding general has shown bimselt fond of fighting in the open. When Malolos is taken the chances are he will be absent, but he should be pursued with utmost, diligence. Until he is removed, peace in the Philippines is hardly probable.

From the army recruiting stations all over the country comes the report of an eagerness to enlist, especially on the part of the former volunteers. on the part of the former volunteers.

The large majority of recruits desire to join regiments which are at Manila or have been ordered thither.

Foreign service, with its discomforts, risks and promise of activity in the Collections made at all promise of activity in the Collections made at all projects on form risks and promise of activity in the field, is attractive, while home duty, with its relative ease and and immumity from danger, is distasteful; and there is a pronounced desire to evade it. This proves that the martial H.A. STURDEVANT, spirit still prevails among the youth of the country. While the army reorganization bill was before the senate, it will be remembered, there was a prolonged debate as so whether the MOLLIE V. O'LEARY, provisions of the bill gave the president the power of conscription. This rush of recruits is in evidence that the time used in debating this question was wasted, since it shows that conscription is afar off, if, indeed, under any circumstances it will ever again become necessary .- Oregonian.
