George Piaster arrived in The Dalles last night from Portland and will have charge of the Elite Annex, the barber shop which will occupy the southeast corner of the Umatilla House. Mr. Parkins informs us it will be ready for opening on Saturday, April 1st; but at the same time will be no joke, but a reality.

J. Eberle, who recently came to The Dalles from Iowa and has a tailor shop on Second street, opposite Mays & Crowe's, is one of those up-to-date tailors which it is a satisfaction to have in a community. He has just received a stock of goods in the very latest patterns, and desires that Dalles people call and see them so that they may be convinced as to their style.

Among the list of casualties sent by Otis yesterday is the name of Charles R. Robert, who was slightly injured in the leg. Among our last recruits was Charles R. Rubart, which it is thought must be the one who is meant. Capt. Bartell tells us that Rubart is a comparative stranger here and that he thinks his home is in the upper country as there were several from there who enlisted here.

A dispatch from Washington says that Oregon's wounded soldier boys will be brought home from Manila as soon as possible, and as there are plenty of transports there they can come at an early date. Those able to travel will be put on immediately. This rule probably applies to those who are seriously injured, and those who will be unable to further engage in the battle. This news will cheer many an aching heart which is saddened by the thought of loved ones who need care being so far away.

Information obtained from Spokane states that there now are twenty-four well-developed smallpox cases in that city. In the pesthouse there are fourteen, in a quarantined lodging-house there are seven, and three others exist in private houses. As there is a possibility of the disease becoming epidemic in Spokane, and therefore spreading to the various places along the railroads, would it not be well for the people of The Dalles to guard against its inroads by vaccinating? Not that we wish to

It is told that the O. R. & N. will soon run their overland train on such time as to connect with the Southern Pacific train out of Portland in the evening, a thing that has never been done in the past. Heretofore, the O. R. & N. train has arrived in Portland just after the Southern Pacific train has left, and there has apparently been no effort to make a connection. This, so it is supposed, was due to the natural desire on the part of the O. R. & N. management to encourage traffic via their steamer line to and from San Francisco, but the new arrangement will be welcomed by the traveling people who have long desired it.

CALLED TO HER ETERNAL HOME

Mrs. J. H. Wood Passes to the World of Endless Day.

As the disciples of old wept over the death of their Lord on the occasion which today is commemorated, so the family of Rev. J. H. Wood was called this morning to grieve over the loss of one to them most dear; and while they are compelled to look upon the closed tomb, to the wife and mother the risen Lord has already appeared. Mrs. Emma Wood having been called at 9:30 o'clock this morning to the land beyond where is an eternal Easter morn.

She was taken ill about two weeks ago with pneumonia, and since that time, although every possible aid has been given her, she has suffered almost beyond endurance. At times she would rally and hope revive in the hearts of those who watched by her bedside; but for the past week she realized she must go, and the thought of leaving her family seemed to be ever present with her, for beside her husband she has left five motherless children—Frank, William, Gladys, Roger and Mary.

Her maiden name was Emma Berrian, and she was born in Lee county, Ill., forty-one years ago the 22nd of this month. Left motherless at the age of 6 years, she spent eight years of childhood in Chicago, and afterward moved to Wisconsin, coming to Oregon in 1876. A short time was spent in Klickitat county. In June, 1877, she was converted and united with the Methodist church. She married Rev. J. H. Wood in The Dalles July, 1877, he seeming to see in her from their first meeting the very elements of womanhood suited to his taste and to be a helpmate in the life work he had chosen as his. Such she has proven herself, and in her death he loses a faithful wife and brave, trusting companion, his only consolation being the thought of her bright Christian experience and the hope of the resurrection beyond, promised to all who believe.

Beside her family, several brothers and sisters mourn her loss, all of whom have received word of her death and will no doubt arrive in time for the funeral, which will take place from the

OREGON FLOUR FOR THE ORIENT

W. S. Byars Negotiating a Contract Under Which He Will Send in Vast Quantities.

W. S. Byars, of the Pendleton roller mills, is negotiating with representatives of the Siberian railway contractors for the shipment of large quantities of flour to be used by the construction force. He figures that the contract will call for about $1,000,000 worth of flour the first year.

Mr. Byars proposes to at once increase the capacity of his mill from 500 barrels to 1000 barrels a day. He estimates that with this increase in capacity his mill will be able to consume about 2,000,000 bushels of wheat annually or about half the usual market surplus of the Inland Empire.

Much significance is attached to the proposed export of breadstuffs to Russia, a country which in the past has been a heavy exporter. That there has been a shortage in the Russian crop was known, but it was not believed the shortage was so great as to necessitate such heavy importations.

Mr. Byars looks for a great future for the wheat industry of the coast by reason of the increasing Oriental demand, as much as in consequence of the frequent failure in the Russian wheat crop.—Telegram.
