MR. SINCLAIR'S PRINCIPLES.

Bartlett Sinclair, whom some labor unions regard as a tyrant and whom order-loving people look upon as a sensible and determined man, made a speech at Kellogg on the Fourth of July, and in speaking of the presence of federal troops in the Cour d'Alenes, said "they are here to preserve order which is only another way of saying they are here to assist the state. No commander has yet deemed it his duty or province to pronounce laws for the Cour d'Alenes. They have simply inquired what the laws, orders and proclamations were that they might afford all needed assistance in their execution. There has been no departure from this program. General Merriam permitted no soldier to go further than co-operate with the state authorities in the enforcement of its laws."

This disposes of some of the assertions that Merriam and the military were running things with a high hand, and that the general was arbitrarily using his power to abridge rights guaranteed by the constitution. As has always been maintained, General Merriam and his soldiers have merely co-operated with the state authorities and have acted solely as a police power for the state.

Touching upon the rights of labor and of labor unions, Mr. Sinclair said: "Labor has all the rights of capital. Muscle or brain should have the same legal considerations as money or other property. It is the right of labor to organize for protection. I believe that all workmen should combine for mutual improvement. I believe that a workingman's compensation is a matter he should seek religiously to increase. A laborer is worthy of his hire. If their interest can be advanced by strikes, it is their right to strike. In order to make a strike successful there is no reasonable objection to the use of persuasion in any direction that does not involve the commission of crime. But beyond that they have no right to go. Threats or assaults, or the use of force to attain success is as criminal as such acts or agencies would be in the perpetration of a misdemeanor or felony. Every man has, under the American flag, the right to choose for whom he will work, but he has no right to exercise that prerogative in behalf of his neighbor. There is no law that enables you or me to say for what or for whom our neighbor shall work. To attempt its exercise by force is a crime, which one state at least will take notice of. The spirit of our liberty is infringed when one man or body of men dictate to another man or body of men as to his contracts. I believe in unions, but I do not believe in crimes or coercion."

If there has been a fairer or franker statement than that of Mr. Sinclair, a good many people have failed to see it. If there is a single principle set forth which can not be approved, the dissenter must be a person ignorant of the mutual rights and obligations existing between man and man. Sinclair's doctrine is that which all good citizens indorse, and which they want to see upheld—Spokesman-Review.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised 'Electric Bitters,' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50c, guaranteed, at Blakeley & Houghton's drug store.
