THE KAISER AND AMERICA.

It is easy to believe that the Kaiser may be induced to visit the World's Fair in St. Louis in 1903. No monarch of a great nation has ever come to the United States. The Emperor of Brazil, in the days when Brazil had a crown-wearer, visited this country more than once. So did the King of the Sandwich Islands. Heirs apparent of a few great monarchies, like the present Prince of Wales, have been here, and so have pretenders to great thrones, like Don Carlos, Czars, kaisers and kings pass from one country to the other in Europe. They occasionally take outings on the Mediterranean, the Baltic and the Black Seas, but none of them thus far have crossed over to the United States.

In many very important respects, however, William II. is a law unto himself. He is the most versatile potentate whom Europe has seen since Napoleon I. He is the most original monarch which any great nation of the world has had since Peter the Great. No crown-wearer since Charles V. talks and thinks in so many languages. He can as easily and as gracefully adapt himself to circumstances and conditions as Henry of Navarre. He cares less for the prejudices and predilections of political prudes than any other monarch of a great nation since Diocletian. A weak and cowardly regard for the traditions of his guild would have deterred every other monarch since Bonaparte from making the proffers of the olive branch to an avowed enemy which the Kaiser has recently done to France. His purpose to visit the Paris exposition in 1900 will undoubtedly be carried out.

William II has good reason to be in an especially amiable mood toward the United States. More of his race are citizens of this country than are found in any other land except his own. The Kaiser will find many things to interest him in this country, if he decides to come. The fact that it has as much wealth as England and France in combination, which are the two richest countries in Europe, will gratify his sense of power. The fact that its territorial area sweeps from a point far up beyond the Arctic Circle to a line below the Tropic of Cancer, and that the summer sun never sets on its domain, will appeal irresistibly to his sense of magnitude and might. The Emperor of Germany should certainly visit the St. Louis World's Fair in 1903, take a tour through the United States and with his quick intelligence and his comprehensive grasp of facts and their significance he will see more marvels in this country than the Queen of Sheba saw in King Solomon's realm.

George Evans, former deputy state auditor, had the decency not to burden the state with the expenses of a trial, when he pleaded guilty to forgery. His example is a refreshing one so far as admission of palpable guilt is concerned. Other public officials who have been caught stealing the money of the people have invariably attempted to escape the consequences of their crimes, and it has cost the state enormous sums to land them in the penitentiary.—Review.
