dock when he had gotten way out in the stream. If the campers don't take pity on him, he'll do without blankets, and judging from the large box of provisions, something to eat as well.

The campers at the various places along the river's bank are thicker than bees in a hive. Beside Cascade and other resorts, at Stevenson there are about 100 campers, mostly from The Dalles and Hood River; while at the hot springs at the mouth of Wind river, are 150 campers and fifty boarders at the hotel. Oregon people are beginning to realize the value of a few weeks outing during the summer months.

The usual services will be held in the Methodist church tomorrow, Rev. J. H. Wood having returned from his trip to the mountains. There will be but five more Sundays until Mr. Wood will leave for conference and according to the rules of the church this being his fifth year at The Dalles, must of necessity be the last. It is therefore fitting that as many members as are in the city be present during the remainder of his stay with the church here.

Another proof of Portland's bungling regarding The Dalles and Dallas was furnished us this morning when the long-distance telephone rang and upon answering it and endeavoring in vain to catch the drift of conversation carried on by the one who had called us, we at length found that some man in Portland had asked for a printing office at Dallas and was given The Dalles. It's time now for Dallas to kick, for even the telephone people don't recognize her existence.

In commenting on the ball accepted in the case of Frank Collins, who was arrested for appropriating property belonging to Willis Hendricks near Dufur, the Dispatch says: "It was indeed a shock to this community, for Frank Collins was sure of a job at Salem for several years. The property he disposed of belonging to Mr. Hendricks would reach the $1000 mark in value, and why the authorities in The Dalles turned such a man loose on so small a bail is something we can't understand."

Regarding the new captain of the Regulator, the Oregonian says: "Captain Charles W. Alden, formerly mate on the steamer Dalles City, of The Dalles, Portland & Astoria Navigation Company, has been appointed master of the Regulator. Captain Alden has been in the employ of the company five years, and is considered one of the best men on the upper river. He was slated for the captaincy of the Inland Flyer, but as that boat has not yet proved satisfactory, another place was found for him. Captain Sherman, whom he succeeds, is now on a towboat on the lower river."

The Heppner Gazette is justly indignant at the reports which some of their neighboring papers have been circulating regarding the smallpox situation there, and after denying some exaggerated statements says: "The smallpox situation here, as we go to press, is that the Driskell family have removed to their ranch, with no other cases developed outside the family. Mr. Shutt is convalescent, and the members of his household—three women and two children—show no symptoms of the contagion, and the fears of the community are at rest. No negligence of precautions will be allowed. All farmers coming to town are familiarizing themselves with the true situation, and returning to their homes, branding the outrageous reports and the unreasonable scare in the country the work of the agents of Satan."

An Aged Cyclist.

Oliver Cromwell Bartmess, of Hood River, spent yesterday in this city, en route to Eugene where he goes to visit two nieces who reside in that city. Mr. Bartmess expects to cover the major part of the trip a wheel, having on Wednesday ridden from Portland to this city, a distance of over fifty miles, in less than nine hours. He left the metropolis at 7:30 o'clock that morning and reached the Capital City about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The fact that Mr. Bartmess covered this distance a wheel in the time specified would not appear unusual or arouse any particular notice, were it not that the rider will celebrate his eightieth birthday on October 1st, next. Although so nearly an octogenarian, Mr. Bartmess is in the best of health and his faculties are not impaired in the least. In fact he is a very active person for one of his years. He was, naturally, quite exhausted after his long bicycle ride and decided to remain in this city yesterday for rest, expecting to resume his journey this morning, although, when seen yesterday afternoon, he had not decided whether he would continue up the valley a wheel or abandon that mode of travel for the more comfortable and expeditious passenger train.—Salem Statesman.

FARMER STEBBINS WAS THERE.

And He Kept the Audience in a Roar of Laughter—A Typical Hayseed.

Packed does not express it when referring to the house which greeted the Shaw company last night in "Farmer Stebbins." The people were crowded in like sardines, and it was the quietest, most orderly audience of the engagement, giving all an opportunity to enjoy every part of the play and the delightful music by the orchestra. "Cavalleria Rusticana" was especially pleasing, as was also the selection "Nigger in the Barnyard," the work in the latter being most novel.

"Farmer Stebbins," which was written by Shaw himself, is virtually a one-part play, but with such an actor as Sam Shaw in the lead, is as much appreciated as if the best acting of each character on the stage were called into play. Never has a Dalles audience seen such a hayseed role played. He was Stebbins, and none could detect Shaw in the whole play. In the first place, the conception of the character was true to life, and carried out in a perfect manner. His unsophisticated manner and odd remarks kept the audience in a roar of laughter. As to the make-up, it could not be beat; and one lady who had not seen them before was heard to remark that she had heard Shaw was a handsome man, but no one could make her believe there was anything even good looking about him after seeing him in last night's play.

While it was really a one-part play, the requirements of the other characters were well met and some clever acting was done. In the last act some good speciality work was introduced, particularly the dancing, for they make no pretention as to singing. There are, however, some splendid dancers in the company, and one seldom sees a more what might be termed versatile dancer than Miss Kelton.

When Mr. Shaw stepped out to make his usual announcements (not about the matinee) he was presented with a handsome bouquet from the Elks of the city, which he accepted very gracefully. It was an immense bouquet tied with Elks colors. Tonight will be the last opportunity to see the company for some time to come. Mr. Shaw has selected "The Phoenix" as his farewell bill. The play is too well known to need an introduction, as it has been seen here before.

One Editor's Opinion.

Here's what a Carlinville, Ill., editor says about The Dalles, and one thing is certain, none of the exaggerated stories which were told some of the editors reached his ears, for he has, if anything, underestimated his figures concerning our commercial value. He says:

"The first city of importance we reached in the Columbia valley was The Dalles, which looked stately with its magnificent trees, large brick blocks, mammoth warehouses, beautiful residences and well kept lawns. We were surprised to learn that The Dalles, where Generals Grant and Sheridan learned the rudiments of warfare, is one of the chief commercial cities of the Northwest. The surrounding country is noted for its magnificent fruit lands, broad plateaus with their waving grain and a great expanse of grazing country that produce meat to feed an empire and clothe a nation.

"The Dalles is the head of navigation on the Middle Columbia; owns its own waterworks at a cost of $150,000, has the best water, being brought from the foothills of Mt. Hood; the center of the best fruit belt on the coast; the greatest original shipping point in the United States. It ships annually 2500 tons of canned salmon, $75,000 worth of fresh fish, 600,000 bushels of wheat, 5000 head of cattle, 100,000 head of sheep, 6,000,000 pounds of wool. The country sends $50,000 worth of strawberries to the Eastern markets, and ships $50,000 worth of other fruit.
