CRITICISING OTIS.

Tracey E. Inman, of Colfax, a recent member of the volunteer signal corps, places the same estimate on General Otis that a good many others have given to the public since their return from the Philippines, says the Spokesman-Review. Mr. Inman was in a good position to observe, but it may be that he is too severe. It is a fact that whether in praise or condemnation, the judgment of a private or of a minor officer on the military worth of the commander of the army corps is not the best in the world. If he has been poorly fed, the private is a competent judge, but, without exception, not a complaint as to the rations has been made.

The grumbling of the privates that Otis did not give them enough fighting, that if left to rush on by themselves they could have speedily captured Aguinaldo, is a most healthy sign, and not one for the American Tagals to gloat over. There has never yet been a good soldier who did not grumble because the officers held him and his fellows in leash. The veterans of the late civil war well remember how they laid down plans of campaigns, gloried in the commanders' good judgment when they hit it right, and condemned him as an old dunce when an opposite policy was pursued. Men who were at first an object of hatred after a little acquaintance became the heroes of the men in ranks.

This war has simply developed the same traits. Take the gallant Colonel Stotsenburg, killed at the head of the Nebraskans at Quingia. At first his men detested him, the hatred was so intense that they had the Nebraska legislature pass a resolution demanding his removal from command. Yet in a very short space of time they grew to realize the worth of the man as a soldier and commander, and before action was taken on the legislature's resolution they had it withdrawn.

MORE SAVINGS.

It has often been said that a trustworthy index of industrial conditions is the balance sheet of the savings banks. If times are hard the deposits fall off; if times are good they increase. When more money is being deposited than is being drawn out it is safe to assume that working people are generally employed, and that they are earning enough to enable them to put something aside for the future.

A report has just been made public which gives the condition of the savings banks of New York. It shows that since the first of the year there have been deposited with these institutions $20,000,000 in excess of the amount withdrawn. There was not a bank which did not exhibit a remarkably healthy increase in deposits. And there is nothing in the experience of New York which differs from the experience of the whole country.
