TRIAL THAT WILL BE HISTORIC

Something more than Capt. Dreyfus, an officer charged with selling military secrets to another nation, is on trial in the little medieval capital of Brittany, in France. The governmental system of France is on trial. This case will show whether France is ruled by her people or by a conclave of military officers. It will reveal whether that country is a republic or a military oligarchy, which is the worst form of a despotism that is possible to place in control of any people in the modern age.

No other trial which has occurred anywhere in the present century has caused the interest throughout the world which this case arouses. The newspapers of every civilized country have been giving a large amount of space to the case for several years, especially since the heroic exposure of the conspiracy against Dreyfus which was made by the novelist Zola. The proceedings of the court will be reported in as much detail by the leading English, German and American papers as they will be by those of France. Every incident connected with the case will be read by every person in the world who is within reach of the daily press. There is a general belief that this trial will be final, and that justice will be done the prisoner. The outside world believes him to be innocent, but his guilt or innocence, whichever it may be, will soon be revealed.

The fact that this trial is taking place is a triumph for public opinion such as could not have occurred a century ago. Scores of persons were imprisoned in the Bastille and other places of detention for political prisoners in Bourbon, France, on even more trivial charges than those on which Dreyfus was apprehended, and they disappeared from the world. The gates of their prisons opened only inward. There was no more hope for their liberation than there was for the Man in the Iron Mask. Jealousy, malevolence or any other base emotion may have immured them, but when once the doors of their prison closed upon them they were never opened until the prisoner was carried to the graveyard. Such a fate is not possible in the modern age, not even in Russia's Siberia, which has ceased to be a place for the confinement of political offenders. Civilization, democracy, the creation of an intelligent and alert public opinion, have prevented a repetition in our century of the lettres de cachet death warrants by which the pompadours, the Montespans and the other parasites of the courts wreaked revenge on their enemies. The world is immeasurably brighter and better than it was a century ago or earlier, and the change has been largely due to the annihilation of caste barriers and the diffusion of the democratic spirit which has been forced upon the world by the precept and example of the United States.—Globe-Democrat.

About twenty-five of the ex-reform school boys were with the army and navy in the Philippines. And not one disgraced himself. One was with Dewey on his flag ship during the battle of Manila, and he furnished the ammunition for one of the guns. Another who went in as a private in one of the Oregon companies came out a first sergeant, having been promoted on account of his efficiency and bravery.
