CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPONS

Regarding the shooting scrape at Pendleton, the East Oregonian aptly says:

The cowardly habit of "packing a gun" contrary to law is chargeable with another crime in Pendleton. One man is in jail and another lies in bed seriously wounded as a result of it. The young man who had a weapon concealed on his person, with which he shot the other, was a year or more ago admitted to practice law, and although having knowledge of the law he deliberately violated it by going armed as if there were no law, or no one to enforce it. If he possessed the least respect for his chosen profession, or for the law, or for order, or for any of the virtues that support society, he would never have armed himself like a brigand, and he would be free from serious trouble at this minute.

This young man had no cause to carry a dangerous weapon on his person and is deserving of little sympathy in his present trouble in consequence, while his victim is deserving of a good deal, for, although engaged in an avocation which necessarily brought him into contact with reckless and desperate characters, he never saw fit to stick a pistol in his pocket or Bowie knife in his boot leg for either purpose of offense or defense. By this one act he demonstrated his superiority over those whose physical and mental deficiencies were such as to cause them to seek consolation in the protection afforded by some dangerous weapon.

The lesson to be learned from this tragedy is that the law should be rigidly enforced against all persons carrying concealed weapons contrary to the law. The officials could not render a more valuable service to society than this.

SHREW Scheme of SALMON.

The close fishing season did not suit the fishermen on the lower Columbia this summer, though it may have been very agreeable to the fish, says the Telegram. The statement that the salmon only fairly commenced running just as the season closed, and that soon afterward they were so thick that they literally crowded one another out of the water, may be taken as an exasperated fisherman's exaggeration, yet there is enough truth in it to suggest that the calendar close season did not correspond with the time of the fishes' migration.

For some reason the salmon adopted a new time table this summer, perhaps because they had obtained from some drowned fisherman a copy of the law; perhaps because they smelt a spell of winter in August. At all events, the law allowed the fish to get the best of the fishermen this year, and efforts will be made to put the close season off till a little later in the season, by a change in the law.

The loss to the fishermen this year may be a gain to them and to the state, in an increased run of salmon in future years. No close season at all would suit some people best. But all reasonable fishermen, as well as others, agree that a close season of a month is necessary; though arbitrary dates cannot exactly fit every season best.
