THE SOUTH NOT SLIGHTED.

Many Southern and a few Northern papers are saying that the South has been overlooked in the recruiting of troops for the war with Spain and the conflict with the Filipinos. The fact that the recruiting point of none of the latest ten regiments will be located nearer the South than St. Louis, which is not in the South at all, is calling out some protests from the region below Mason and Dixon's line. The New Orleans Picayune, for example, speaks of what it calls "the contemptible narrow-mindedness and prejudice which have so long characterized the war department concerning the employment of officers and troops from the Southern states."

This charge is hardly reasonable. No volunteers from the South were in any of the battles in Cuba against Spain because none of the Southern regiments were trained sufficiently at the time the Cuban campaign began to justify the military commander of the expedition to Cuba in taking any of them with him. Only two volunteer regiments from the whole country took an active part in Shafter's campaign, one being from New York and the other from Massachusetts. These two particular regiments were trained and disciplined up to the standard required by the exigencies of the service, but none of the other regiments were, and consequently these two were the only ones which participated actively in the fighting in Cuba.

No sectional partiality has been shown by the administration in the matter of raising or employing troops either this year or last year. Two of the ten new regiments whose ranks have just been filled were recruited in the South—one in Georgia and the other in Texas. The reason why none of the ten regiments recently ordered are to be recruited in the South is because the authorities want to have them located as near as possible to the direct route to the ports of embarkation. The South will get its full quota of officers of these regiments, however. There can be no complaint on that score. No Southern regiment has taken part in the recent campaign in the Philippines except one from Tennessee. Neither has any Eastern regiment participated in that campaign save one from Pennsylvania. These two chances to be the only regiments from the country east of the Mississippi which were in the Philippines campaign. The administration naturally selected for transportation to the Philippines regiments located as near to the Pacific coast, the point of embarkation, as possible. The East has made no complaint of unfair discrimination on that account. In fact, there has been no real partiality shown to any state or locality in the conflicts of 1898 or 1899. All sections have, as nearly as practicable, been treated alike in the distribution of the burdens and honors of the war.—Globe-Democrat.

Volcanic Eruptions

Are grand, but skin eruptions rob life of joy.
