THE DALLES, OREGON.

The following from the Moro Observer is very apropos:

Discussing the present situation of affairs in The Dalles if our friends will permit the suggestion—it is not the question whether the Construction Company "is in sympathy with The Dalles," so much as "when will The Dalles get into sympathy" with itself? The visit of Henry Villard and family to The Dalles recently caused many old residents to reflect on "what might have been" had Mr. Villard been permitted to do for The Dalles what he wished to do, sixteen years ago—when he was the moving spirit in both the O. R. & N. and the N. P. R. Cos. It was his ambition to locate all the shops for the western division of both systems in The Dalles, but he was not permitted to do so. Why? The city was not in "sympathy" with itself.

As a result, after Mr. Villard was downed in the house of his friends, the shops that were in The Dalles were taken away and the place lost an enterprise that would have made The Dalles by this time the first city in the state in point of population and business. There can be no doubt whatever about that. Mr. Villard in his palmy days was the most enterprising and far-seeing railroad builder of the age. In the construction of the N. P. R. he foresaw exactly what the present management have just begun to realize. That the key to the Pacific Northwest trade is the gravity haul down the Columbia river to tidewater.

Had those who superseded Mr. Villard in the management of the N. P. R. realized that fact, and retained control of the O. R. & N., they'd not have been compelled to make the sacrifices they just have made, in the fight for trackage which ended on the 7th so gloriously for the old rival. But The Dalles gains nothing by the recent compromise, and if the city ever expects to recover from past follies, now is the time to do so. Not by waiting to ascertain whether Messrs. Turner, Mohr and others are in "sympathy" with The Dalles, but by sensible work, tending to show to the people of the waiting empire that The Dalles is worthy of the co-operation of interior forces in the greatest of all plans to develop this marvelous region for the good of all.

LET'S "HOG" IT ALL.

The merchants throughout the Inland Empire are buying and selling Eastern hams, bacon and lard in great quantities. In other words there is not enough of the home product to supply the demand. This is a condition that has long existed in this section, but one that should not exist. The farmers of the middle west should not be called on to supply these necessities to the farmers and others of Oregon and Washington. The fact of the matter is, they should be produced at home. The conditions are favorable to such production, and during the depressed times of a few years ago home demand was fully met by home production of these articles.

But everybody is devoting himself to producing wheat, and too many are producing the cereal on a large scale, with the result that other profitable lines of industry are neglected, and the people are sending large amounts of wealth to the East that should be kept at home. There are a number of people in "the hog business," but not enough, and the few that are in it find it profitable.

It is ridiculous in the extreme that the consumers of this entire section should be made to contribute a vast amount to railroads for transportation of products from the East that could be produced with benefit to all concerned at home. In other words, there should be more hogs and hog ranches throughout the Inland Empire, more diversity of industry with an increase in our capacity of self-support.—East Oregonian.
