A SILLY SCREED.

The New York World is the latest paper of prominence to make the absurd attempt to inflate a boom for Admiral Dewey as the Democratic candidate for president, says the Telegram. In scare type it declares that "in only one way can the Democratic party elect the next president. This is by nominating a man for whom every Democrat will vote." It says that no other possible candidate fills this requirement, and that the need of the hour is a name, a man, namely, George Dewey.

This sounds very much like a confession that the Democratic party has no principles upon and for which to stand and battle, no issues that it dare courageously present and manfully sustain—it has no chance to win unless it can secure for its use the name of the nation's popular hero.

But, considered in any light, the proposition is the rankest possible exhibition of political silliness. There are several good reasons for thus characterizing such an appeal, but two, or even one, of them is sufficient.

Dewey positively refuses to be a candidate.

Dewey in a party sense is not a Democrat, never has been one, and has no sympathy with any of the principal declarations or objects of the Democratic party, as they are certain to be formulated and promulgated by the next Democratic national convention.

To this it might be added that there is no evidence that Dewey is an exceptionally suitable man for president. One day's work made him a great admiral, and gave him world-wide fame; but it does not necessarily follow that he would make an ideal president.

All this, however, is unnecessary to discuss or consider, for as long ago as last February Dewey declared, for publication, as follows:

"I would not accept a nomination for the presidency of the United States. I have no desire for any political office. I am unfitted for it, either in education or training. . . . I desire to retire in peace to the enjoyment of my old age. The navy is one profession; politics is another; I am too old to learn a new profession. I have no political associations, and my health would not stand the strain of a canvass. I have been approached by politicians repeatedly, . . . but I have absolutely refused to consider any proposition whatever. This is final."

This direct and positive statement has never been denied or modified. It means just what it says. Dewey would under no circumstances accept a nomination, and most certainly not from the Democrats, thus array-ing himself against the administration under which he was given glorious employment and won undying fame.

Hence the clamoring of a few papers for Dewey to become a presidential candidate, either Democratic or Republican, is flat newspaper lunacy.
