"THE TIMBER KING."

The people of the Pacific Northwest have none of the narrow spirit which influences and sometimes governs older communities in their treatment of newcomers. Out here the invitation is general to home-seekers and investors, says the Spokesman-Review. There exists a perpetual welcome to all who will come here and take farms, orchards, gardens, ranges and mining claims. Capital which will show a disposition to make permanent investments and engage in new industries is wanted.

But withal this hospitable spirit, the public will not take with gratification the news that Frederick Weyerhaeuser, "the lumber king of America," has paid $6,000,000 for 1,000,000 acres of timber lands in the Pacific Northwest. Americans do not take enthusiastically to great landed estates of a million acres, bought, as the announcement has it in this case, because the buyer "believes that timber is bound to advance in that Western country, and that he will realize a handsome profit." The gigantic deal is speculative, and it does not appear that Mr. Weyerhaeuser contemplates in connection with it the establishment of a single new industry. It is nothing less than a gigantic private forest reserve.

Illustration is required to enable the mind to grasp the magnitude of this transaction. A million acres could be subdivided into 10,000 tracts of 100 acres each. It is sufficient to give 100,000 men a 10-acre tract apiece. It is nearly the equivalent of a piece of country forty miles square—a large-sized country. It is nearly as large as Delaware, and larger than Rhode Island.

The West is a land of magnificent distances, but its people will not be enthusiastic over the prospect of the creation of million-acre private forest reserves.

Gomez says that the "honorable Cuban should place before himself the ideal of the republic, remembering that every day on which the sun sets until the establishment of the republic is an injury to the Cubans." Every reasonable person who has been in Cuba, however, knows that the Cubans are not yet ready for self-government. Gen. Lee, a man who has investigated the matter on the ground, and who was relied on to give great aid to the anti-annexationists, says self-government would be an injury to Cuba at the present time. He wants an American protectorate or annexation. There is a very strong probability that when the Cubans do their voting on the question of their future government the annexation side will have a majority.

Aguinaldo, in his proclamation, is correct in saying that congress will meet in a few weeks, but he is wrong in his intimation that congress will veto what he and his Democratic friends call the "imperialist" policy. Aguinaldo's mistake is natural. Some one of his allies probably has told him the Republican plurality in the House will be only fourteen or fifteen, and this has given him hope that congress will order the withdrawal of the American troops, so as to allow him to massacre all the American civilians which he would find in Manila or other parts of the islands. Before congress is in session many days, however, the rebel chief will learn that his allies are powerless to help him.

My wife has been using Chamberlain's Pain Balm, with good results, for a lame shoulder that has pained her continually for nine years.
