Shippers appear to be satisfied with this decision, for it protects them against loss, but a principle is and the other continental European remedy that gives immediate results. nations, abuts against no other country, and the difficulty for her in getting food from the United States which would be shipped to any country near by, and thence transferred to her own ports on her own vessels, would be much greater than at would be for France or' Germany to obtain it under similar circumstances. Of course in that case the United States would be hampered in its dealings with England in such a situation.

Thus England, by the position which she is apparently taking today, is preparing trouble for herself for the future and giving aid to all of her possible enemies. Many Englishmen expect trouble with France at some day in the near future, irritate or cause sneezing. It spreads itself France would certainly be at an advantage as compared with England if the latter intends to maintain the position which she appears to have assumed in this case. Theoretically, England's diplomats and statesmen are supposed to have fifty or a hundred years hence constantly in view. It is evident that their provision has been abandoned in this instance. For the sake of a doubtful benefit in the immediate time they are establishing a precedent which promises to seriously impede their country in the future .- Globe-Democrat.
