THE LAST OF A GREAT GROUP

Richard W. Thompson, of Indiana, whose death has just taken place, was distinguished among his countrymen of today in many particulars, says the Globe-Democrat. He was the last eminent survivor of that "year of great babies," 1809—the year which produced Lincoln, Hamlin, Gladstone, Robert C. Winthrop, Darwin, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Tennyson and others who won fame in many fields. Indiana sent him to its legislature in 1834, and his public life may be said to have begun at that time. It elected him to the national house of representatives in 1840. No other American who has been alive in recent years was in either branch of congress as far back as that, but ex-Gov. Alexander Ramsey, of Minnesota, who is still alive, entered congress two years later. Thompson, therefore, was in congress fourteen years before the notably long political career of John Sherman, which was ended by resignation a little over a year ago, and of Justin S. Morrill, which was closed by death early in 1899, began.

To the popular mind Lincoln appears to be a personage of a generation or two ago, as more than a third of a century has passed since his death. If alive today, however, Lincoln would be only four months older than Thompson was at his death. Gladstone's life, even in a country which has seen many memorably long political careers, held a high place in the scale of longevity, yet if Gladstone were alive to this day he would be more than half a year younger than the Indian who whose death has just taken place. Thompson was a presidential elector in 1840, or sixty years ago, and cast his vote for William Henry Harrison. The United States at that time had only 17,000,000 inhabitants, and its western boundary was the Sabine, the Red and the Arkansas rivers and the Rocky mountains. Texas, California, Oregon, Washington and several other states and two territories have been added to the national domain since that time, exclusive of Alaska and the more recent acquisitions, and the population of the country has more than quadrupled.

Comparatively few public offices were held by the deceased Indianan, and the actual duration of his public service was not long. His only important national posts were representative in congress and secretary of the navy, the last of which offices he held in the cabinet of President Hayes. No other man of his day, however, declined so many important posts, administrative and diplomatic, tendered by presidents as he did. Among the presidents who offered him offices which he did not accept were Taylor, Lincoln, Grant and Harrison. As a Whig at the outset in his active life and as a Republican ever since the Republican party was founded, he wrote more platforms of his own state and assisted in writing more national platforms than any other American who ever lived. He personally saw every president of the United States except Washington and the first Adams, and was on terms of intimacy with many of them. In every presidential canvas from that of 1832, when he took the stump for Clay, he made speeches, even in that of 1896, in which year he was a delegate to the St. Louis convention. A great deal of history has been made in the United States since Richard W. Thompson first entered national station sixty years ago, and he assisted in making a considerable part of it.

The claim of other cough medicines to be as good as Chamberlain's are effectually set at rest in the following testimonial of Mr. C. D. Glass, an employe of Bartlett & Dennis Co., Gardiner, Me. He says: "I had kept adding to a cold and cough in the winter of 1897, trying every cough medicine I heard of without permanent help, until one day I was in the drug store of Mr. Houlehan and he advised me to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and offered to pay back my money if I was not cured. My lungs and bronchial tubes were very sore at this time, but I was completely cured by this remedy, and have since always turned to it when I got a cold, and soon find relief. I also recommend it to my friends and am glad to say it is the best of all cough medicines." For sale by Blakeley & Houghton.
