TWO PICTURES.

The following from the Spokane-Review is remarkable as the unprejudiced statement of a paper that four years ago worked with all its might for Bryan and is still reckoned among the supporters of the Bryanite creed:

Prosperity and strength are reflected from every line of the consolidated bank statement, published elsewhere this morning. From February 13th to April 26th, Spokane bank deposits increased about $500,000, and this notwithstanding the withdrawal within that period of nearly $400,000 for investment in government bonds. In the same period cash and exchange increased over $250,000. The statement further shows that every bank in the city has from two to four times the legal requirements of cash on hand.

In other words, money is plentiful in Spokane, and the only difficulty experienced by the local banks is that depositors so greatly outnumber those who want to borrow banking funds. The banks are constantly on the lookout for desirable borrowers.

These cheering conditions are in remarkable contrast to the conditions which existed here seven years ago next June. Seven Spokane banks had gone down in the crash, and only three banks were able to weather the storm. Money was tighter than a drumhead, and it was all but impossible to borrow on any sort of security. Profound depression hung over the town, and thousands of citizens were in financial distress. Even the morning paper, which had made a brave effort to whistle a courageous strain, was moved to say: "The trouble with the silver lining to this cloud lies in the fact that even the lining looks dark."

Almost no one paid taxes in those depressing times. Everything went delinquent. The delinquent tax list published in June, 1893, by the city treasurer, filled fifty columns of small type in this paper.

All building operations were brought to a standstill, for who cared to build when store buildings and dwellings were daily vacated? And to heighten the distress, the Cour d'Alene miners went out on strike. But thousands here never lost faith and hope, not even when the skies were black with the tempest. Events and results have more than justified their magnificent courage.

It is amusing, says an exchange, to hear a Bryanite coaxing a gold democrat to come back to the party by telling him that the republicans have made it impossible for Bryan to destroy the present value of the dollar or to put the country on a silver basis.

MACHINERY OF MAN.

Some of the Wonders of Our Physical Make Up.

Workings of the Muscles in Different Parts of the Body—The Motion of Breathing and Cause of Sneezing.

Perhaps you don't know how long it takes your finger nail to grow its own length? From one to eight months. It grows much faster in the young than in the old. When you get a severe attack of illness it scarcely grows at all, and a sort of ridge is found near the tip. Months after you are well a doctor can tell that you were ill by feeling this ridge. The nail of the ring finger grows faster than any other.

Your bones, says a medical authority, are the strongest things for their weight that can be found. Bone bears three times as heavy a weight as oak, and nearly as much as wrought iron, without being crushed.

You hear people say that bone makes weight, meaning that it is the heaviest part of a man's body. This is not at all the case. In the skeleton weighs only one-seventh of his whole weight. The skeleton of a man 80 years old weighs only about half what it weighed when he was 20.

I am sure that you think the pupil of the eye is a black circle just on the surface. In reality it is a hole filled by a transparent lens. The black circle is part of the inner surface at the back of the eye—quite three-quarters of an inch behind the front where you think it is. There is a most beautiful arrangement of muscles around this hole to widen it when the light is dim and to narrow it when the light is bright.

If you lie on your back and bend your leg on your body you will find that you cannot possibly straighten it from the knee downward. The reason of this is that the upper part of the legs are bent on the body and the lower parts straightened by the same muscles—the hamstrings—and these are too short to perform both operations at once. When you sit on a chair you will find that you can swing the lower part of your leg from side to side. Now stand up, raise one leg from the ground, and try to do the same thing. You cannot do it, because the leg gets locked at the knee by a most ingenious contrivance in order to make it firm to stand upon.

Why does your chest rise and fall? This is a very curious phenomenon. Between each pair of ribs there are a set of muscles, and when they contract the ribs are dragged upward, and enlarge their chest cavity. Air rushes in through the windpipe to fill the enlarged space, and thus the lungs are filled with oxygen, and the impure blood in them is purified. That is to say, it is supplied with oxygen in place of carbonic acid. But the muscles get tired in a couple of seconds, and the presence of the outside atmosphere makes the chest fall, and, in consequence, the carbonic acid is forced out. But in a second the muscles contract again, and again raise the chest. Now the reason the muscles contract is this: When impure blood comes into the lungs a message is automatically dispatched to the brain, saying: "There is a lot of poisonous carbonic acid here. The man will die if it is not immediately replaced by oxygen." And the brain sends a peremptory order to the muscles to contract.

It is the presence of carbonic acid which brings the whole operation about. If there were no carbonic acid, or very little, then no message would go to the brain, and the chest would not rise. You can prove this by an experiment. You may notice that the chest rises and falls every few seconds or thereabouts. Now take a very deep breath and breathe out again, and you will find that the chest does not rise for many seconds. So much oxygen has been taken in, and so much carbonic acid breathed out, that there is not enough of the latter in the lungs for eight or ten seconds to require removal.

Why do you sneeze when you are getting a cold? Because your lungs are becoming inflamed, and the little tubes that lead from them are consequently filled with moisture. The sneeze is an effort to rid the lungs of superfluous moisture.
