A MAGNIFICENT SPEECH.

Senator C. W. Fulton Makes a Powerful Defense of Republican Principles and Policy.

The speech of Senator C. W. Fulton at the Vogt opera house last night was the event of the campaign. The big building was filled to the door, and the senator's speech of a couple of hours was applauded to the echo.

They never can forget the experience they passed through from the time that Cleveland started his campaign of free trade under the name of tariff reform. They don't forget the 3,000,000 of people out of work and depending on public charity; the broken banks and collapsed business houses; the ruined lives and ruined homes of that awful period.

The Bryanite universal panacea was 16 to 1. If we did not get that, money would become scarcer, the money power would contract the currency, and it would be the dollar instead of the man.

Mr. Fulton had seen notes of a speech of Judge Bennett wherein he condemned the annexation of the Philippines because the people were not fit to bear the burthens of American citizenship.

while in the next breath he said the Filipinos should be given their independence because they were a highly civilized people and the majority of them white. Now, if the islanders were so highly civilized as the judge claims, why should he fear their annexation? What is the judge complaining about? He was reminded of the Highland preacher's sermon on the text, as the preacher read it, "The devil, he goeth about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour."

The republican party was the only party that had ever legislated against trusts. It was easy to tell who raised the cry against the Porto Rico tariff. Senator Jones, Bryan's manager four years ago, and the chairman of the democratic national convention, introduced a bill in the senate to give back the duties collected on Porto Rican exports to the men from whom they had been collected.

The republicans in congress promptly passed a law in accordance with the president's suggestion. Which do you commend, the action of the president and his party, or the action of the democratic party, who wanted to give back the tax to the trusts.

Mr. Fulton referred to the demo-populist railroad plank, and denied emphatically that any number of railroad men had ever asked the republican state convention for a similar plank. He himself was in favor of the relief asked for in the plank, and would support such a measure; and whoever might be defeated, he would be in the next legislature, for he was a hold-over.

peal for a straight vote. The election of a demo-populist would be heralded all over the country. He did not need to say a word to his audience on behalf of their fellow-townsmen and able and hard-working representative, Malcolm A. Moody, but he would have them remember when they went to the polls that there was a senator to elect at the next legislature, and a vote for a democrat was a vote to condemn the republican policy and to send a demo-populist to the United States senate.
