It is true that China boasts of a civilization as old as the Pyramids, and it may be a fact that the Chinese were what they are now when the shepherd kings ruled over Egypt, before Noah planted his vineyard on the slopes of Ararat, or long before Moses tended the flocks of his fatherin-law, Jethro, or any of the old Biblical worthies lived; yet, as a rule, she has blocked the wheels of progress in every era of her eventful history. Chinese have reaped some advantages from the teachings of Confucius, Buddha and Mahomet; but as a race they have clung tenaciously to their old customs and superstitions. The imprisoned emperor, with Li Hung Chang, represents today a small minority who are in favor of modern advancement; but the millions sympathize with the reigning empress and Prince Tuan, the commander of the Boxers, who may21-1 are in favor of old China, with the filth of its cities, the terrible subjection of its people and its horrible devil-worship.
