DARE NOT EAT BEEF

Natives of India Starve with Millions of Cattle.

Religious Observances Prevent Them from Gratifying the Cravings of Nature - Famine in Years of Plenty.

In large districts of India today millions of cattle could not be sold for 50 cents a head. The country, yellow and parched, has been turned into a desert by the failure of the Monsoon rains. There are grass lands and fodder in other parts of India, but the poor animals are too weak to be driven to them, even if there were cattle buyers to take them away; so they die like flies, succumbing to starvation far more quickly than their owners. The thought has never occurred to the 35,000,000 Indian peasantry now suffering from hunger that the cattle would have been a food resource to tide them over the months of crop failure. They have plenty of cattle. Among all the animals of India the various breeds of horned and humped cattle hold the first place. They are the draft animals in the little field of the poorest peasant. All the transportation of the inland roads depends upon them. The household that has not its cow is in the direst poverty.

Suppose these natives, when the signs pointed unmistakably to a season of crop failure, had cured under their hot sun many thousands of tons of beef by sun-drying, as jerked beef is prepared in South America, indescribably suffering and thousands of lives would have been saved; but the very idea of making such provision as this against the horrors of famine would be inexpressibly shocking to the 100,000,000 people of India, who base their religious beliefs upon the Vedas. They would never dream of such a profanation of the teachings of Brahminism. They would rather swallow dirt and gnaw roots than eat beef, and yet they are not strict vegetarians, for all eat butter and milk, and also fish and mutton when they can procure them.

The Hindus and those who share with them their religious beliefs are just what history tells us their fathers were, three and twenty centuries ago. The highest law that concerns the Hindu is to eat correctly, and beef is one of the proscribed foods; so with this food resource in every fagony, prized highly, as it is, by most of the world, the Hindu dies of hunger rather than partake of it. These facts are perhaps as impressive an illustration as can be given of the profound influence which religious injunction and custom have upon the habits, tastes and prejudices and consequently upon the commerce of whole nations.

The value of East Indian cattle for food has been amply demonstrated. The 57,000,000 Mahomedans living in India have no qualms or scruples about beef eating. Some years ago we read almost daily for a time of bloodshed between the Mahomedans and Hindus of northwest India. Beef was the cause of the incipient warfare. The Hindu neighbors of the Moslems decided that their feelings had been outraged too long by the repugnant spectacle of cattle shambles and beef eating. They resolved to put an end to them, but the undertaking was too large for the comparatively small number of zealots who engaged in it.

In this vast region, so densely peopled that the specter of famine is not far away even in years of plenty, no meats are imparted except for European consumption. If there is a partial failure of rice, wheat, maize, barley or the indigenous grains on which the laborer lives, starvation begins at once; and so while India sells to the world every year from $250,000,000 to $350,000,000 worth of products, and buys about three-fourths as much as she sells, her purchases are almost wholly textiles, machinery, railroad material and coal, even when hunger stalks abroad; and the main reason why the great evil of famine is not averted or mitigated by food imports is because the religious tenets of most of the people confine them to the few cereals they raise themselves as the mainstay of life. In one respect, however, religious prejudice is a blessing to the country. It is to the lasting shame of some modern nations that they destroy thousands of barbarous or semi-civilized men and women by selling them poison in the form of the purest qualities of alcoholic liquors; but they find no market for their fiery gin and forty-rod among the hundreds of millions of East Indians, because Islam throughout the world is a vast teetotal society, and among the Hindus to touch liquor is a sign of the lowest caste. Thus certain religions which we do not include among the highest forms have happily reared an insurmountable barrier against one of the worst evils of western civilization.

Counterfeiters Teaching a Lesson. The counterfeiters are helping the people to solve the problem of safe and convenient money. They are demonstrating the impossibility to all but professionals of keeping track of our intricate system of paper currency, which is made still more complicated by the frequent changes in designs. And there stands the constant object lesson of the Bank of England notes, the simplest in the world, yet never counterfeited successfully.—Philadelphia Ledger.
