

For President—WILLIAM M'KINLEY, of Ohio.

For Vice-President—THEODORE ROOSEVELT, of New York.

Mr. Samuel Gompers, who speaks with authority for and of organized labor, recently defined his attitude toward trusts and attempts to legislate them out of existence as follows in an editorial in the American Federationist: "Organized labor looks with apprehension upon the many panaceas offered by theorists to curb the growth and development or destroy the combination of industry. We have seen those who knew little of statecraft and less of economics urge the adoption of laws to regulate interstate commerce and to prevent combinations and trusts, and we have also seen that these measures, when enacted, have been the very instruments employed to deprive labor of the benefit of organized effort, while at the same time they have simply proved incentives to more subtly and surely lubricate the wheels of capital's combination. For our part, we are convinced that the state is not capable of preventing the legitimate development or natural concentration of industry. All the propositions that have come under our observation would beyond doubt react with greater force and injury upon the working people of our country than upon the trusts."

Bryan will be beaten by a larger majority than he was before and that will be the end of him for ever more as a presidential candidate. Then Bryanism will burst wide open. The majority will come back to their senses and repudiate and renounce free silver and free riot. Thousands of them will swear by all the gods in the Roman pantheon that they never believed in Bryan but were for an honest dollar and good government. The minority will go over, body and breeches, to socialism as the place where they feel at home. And thus socialism will become an important and most disturbing element in our political life, for socialism is the next door to anarchy and anarchy is the next door to perdition. This is what democracy will have brought upon the nation by cuddling Bryanism, for parties, like persons, reap only what they sow.

The Grand Army man who votes for Stevenson will have to hold his nose during the process. When Stevenson ran for vice-president in 1892 the New York Press published the affidavit of William B. Whiffen, editor of the Metamora Sentinel, where Stevenson resided in 1865, which said that when Stevenson heard of the murder of Lincoln "he said he was glad Lincoln was shot and that he should have been killed earlier."

There is pathos in the announcement that a distillery will be built on the garden spot of the old Methodist mission at The Dalles, says the Eugene Guard. But the entire stuff will be knocked out of the Guard's pathos when it learns that the distillery is not built on the old Methodist mission at all.

If the campaign were to last longer a prize might be safely offered for any Bryanite seen on the streets of Salem. They are growing to be mighty scarce, says the Salem Statesman.

An Example for Boys.

It would be a good object lesson for boys who would be of some use in the world to walk up to Paradise farm, only one half mile from the depot, and see what a boy only 15 years of age has done. They will see a churn running by machinery, also a grindstone, a straw cutter, and a mill for making corn meal, graham flour and chop. This machinery is all run by the spring on the farm. Percy Adams has done all the work himself, and says the next thing he will rig up will be a saw to saw all his mother's stove wood. He works at his machinery at odd spells when out of school. His father says he is often asked: "What are you going to make out of Percy?" The reply is, just what he was born for. He must first be thoroughly educated. Then turn him loose and watch him. He will just as naturally dive into a machine shop as a duck will seek water, or a bee make a straight line for his hive when loaded with honey. He has no taste for Blackstone, hates the smell of pill-bags and seems to have been born with little respect for sacerdotal robes. As to farming for a living—well, he would rather by his potatoes than to raise them.—Hood River Glacier.
