Country Preachers,

There was a conference of Methodist ministers at Norfolk, Virginia, recently, at which the members made reports of their work during the past year, and told what their salaries were. One man had received nothing. Another had an income of twenty-six dollars. Many. without a thought of complaint or reproach, reported some so pitifully small as to be almost beyond belief.

The conditions are not peculiar either to that conference or to the Methodiet church. There are men in other parts of the country and in all the denominations serving, like these, for smaller wages than the hod-carrier or the crossing sweeper earns. They are the country preachers who make up the rank sale at Frazer's barber shop. and file of the army of the church, and do the hardest of the work.

open the morning paper to see their names in the head-lines and their sermons in the news columns. Year after year, in patience and with smilling faces. they answer the countiess petty calls upon their etrength and sympathy; and when at length they fall, others, who know all the conditions, all the hardships they must face, are yet willing to etep to their places and carry forward their work.

The theme of the country preacher may be simple, his speech sometimes uncultured, his learning often slight; but the spirit of his faithful and ill-paid broadcloth is a figure most pobly dignified, most rarely beautiful - Youth's
