A CONNECTICUT EXPERIMENT.

It is reported that a bill is about to be introduced in the Connecticut legislature providing that all persons convicted of certain crimes, including assaults on women and wife beating, shall be officially flogged as a feature of their punishment, and that young boys shall be dealt with in the same manner in cases where a whipping is likely to be better for them and the state than commital to the reform school would be. Of course, says the New York Tribune, we shall hear exclamations of surprise and horror at this revival of ancient barbarism in the land of steady habits and conservative laws, but for our part we are glad to hear that the bill is heartily supported by a large number of intelligent citizens of Connecticut, and especially of experienced criminal lawyers and judges, and we hope it will pass. If it does, and if the statute is firmly and judiciously administered, the probability is that it will serve several excellent purposes, giving those to whom it applies their first realizing sense of the nature of their offending, exercising a strong deterrent influence on others of similar propensities and affording an instructive object lesson in the fit the crime.

We do not forget the more or less sensible strictures which have been passed on the Delaware whipping address. post. Undoubtedly the Connecticut plan would be carried too far if it were made to include a variety of minor offences and to authorize a public spectacle of shame and suffering for the diversion of low minded people. But there are offences of a peculiarly atrocious character, to which cowards and degenerates are especially prone, which, we believe, cannot be punished so appropriately and with so good a chance of cure and prevention in any other way as by corporal chastisement. The whip inspires terror in man and beast, and we are inclined to think that in man it also tends to inspire remorse. We should not advise a whip of scorpions, or even the most formidable article that an ingenious Yankee could produce to order, and a moderate limit of stripes should be strictly fixed and enforced. But the infliction of such a degree of pain and have them. fear as would still leave the culprit breath enough to howl for the mercy he did not show his victim would Pain Balm. Try it. But there are bestialities in comparison with which murder seems almost respectable, and Connecticut will set a good example if she does something out of the common to requite them and put a DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve are worthby whom they are committed.
