

PATRONIZE HOME INDUSTRY.

The Junction City Times gives its readers a well-timed lecture on the habit of sending to extensive Eastern "mail-order" houses for every article they need in the household as soon as they get $10 ahead in cash to send away.

The practice of which the Times complains is prevalent all over the United States and is certainly injurious to local interests. There is too much disposition to save a few dimes in the purchase of articles which can be procured in Chicago and such cities for cash, and to purchase on credit from the local merchant the things of staple price upon which there is little margin.

In this way the ready cash goes out of the country, while local enterprises lag, and the very farmers who watch the Chicago bargain counter most closely through the catalogues are the loudest declaimers that "there is no market here," "there are no factories," "there is no enterprise," "there is no price for property."

This habit is not so prevalent among old residents of Oregon as among new comers from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, etc. Those people know the price of every article in the big catalogues and are always talking about how much they can save by purchasing the things they want in Chicago.

We cannot imagine what line of reasoning is followed by farmers, mechanics and laborers who practice that kind of financiering. How can a farmer expect a decent market for his produce unless by his patronage he encourages the merchant and the manufacturer of his immediate neighborhood? How can the mechanic expect profitable employment if the branches of industry in his community are crippled for want of customers? And the laboring man in the same way. It seems to us that the principles of self-interest and self-protection would dictate a policy of home patronage in order that all enterprises might prosper.—Salem Statesman.

FOOLS AND FOLLY.

The London "Statist" was frank enough to admit a few days ago that the effect of the Dingley tariff was to put the country on a sound financial basis by practically converting it into a creditor nation. It urges, however, that, having accomplished this result, it should be repealed in order to give other nations a show to sell goods in our markets and help them to again undermine our position.

There are some fools in the United States who think this is good advice, and are urging that we should repeat the folly of the Cleveland administration and give the foreigner a chance to again place us under obligations so that the old-time process of squeezing us could be resumed. The economists are all pretty well agreed that in the years gone by it was possible for England to take advantage of our position as a debtor nation to compel us, whenever it was deemed advisable to do so, to part with our raw materials and foodstuffs at ruinously cheap rates in order to meet demands upon us.
