OREGONIAN'S PART IN "A MOMENTOUS CONFLICT"

The following is clipped from an editorial that appeared in the Oregonian of the 18th, entitled "A Momentous Conflict":

Take out of Christianity today the atonement, the meaning of Christmas and Easter, the sure reward of heaven, the certain penalties of hell, and what would you have left? How effective a religion would the world wake up to, on the next morning after these doctrines were stricken from the faith of the millions? Nothing is more certain than that today, however it will be in the future, these beliefs are absolutely necessary to the preservation of the moral order. It is his turn to speak who can show why it is that only out of orthodoxy does the true converting, regenerating force arise, or how this intense moral conviction and religious fervor can be built up on the philosophy of Spencer and the religion of Renan.

Truer words than these were never penned, and yet for many long years the Oregonian has never ceased to cast the full force of its unquestioned ability on the side of those who have assailed these "fundamental" Christian beliefs as the credulous superstitions of an effete age; beliefs which it now, with most refreshing inconsistency, affirms to be absolutely necessary to the preservation of the moral order!

THE CHRONICLE is in no wise surprised that the Portland Catholic Sentinel should warn the big daily that its continued assaults upon "doctrines which are deemed most sacred by all who deservedly bear the name of Christian" will compel the editor of that paper to do all in his power to persuade the Catholic people of Oregon to refuse the entrance of the Oregonian into their homes. We believe there are many thousand Protestant Christians in Oregon who feel as the editor of the Sentinel does.

THE CHRONICLE has no desire to give utterance to a single harsh word in this connection. It has a most sincere admiration for the many excellent qualities the Oregonian possesses as a newspaper, but our careful perusal of the pages of that paper for more than a quarter of a century has generated an abiding conviction that the Oregonian has done more to destroy the religion of Christ and undermine the faith of the people in the doctrines so ably defended by Dr. Hill in his sermon of last Sunday than all the anti-Christians in the state put together. Harsh words, do you say? Be it so. We cannot help it, not even if it be an aggravation to say that they are in no sense the product of a momentary impulse but the settled conviction of many years.

The Christ of the New Testament and of history was "uniquely divine," "God over all, blessed forever," and as such commands loving obedience, or He was an impostor whose claim on humanity is contempt of His pretensions. And there is no middle ground. Destroy men's faith in a

Christ supremely divine and you leave millions without rudder or compass on a shoreless sea. But this is precisely what the Oregonian has been doing for many years and, we fear, with most deplorable success.

The following refreshingly sensible remarks appear in the Eugene Guard of the 16th. Coming from an intensely democratic source they are all the more entitled to respectful consideration: "President McKinley has acted wisely in according to British demands for neutrality of the Panama canal in case of war. War abrogates treaties between combatants, and is sufficient excuse for a disregard of treaties with friendly nations should the exigencies of the occasion demand. In the event of a war in which this country should be engaged requiring the control of the canal against the enemy we would take the canal, then make apologies afterward. The geographical conditions give the United States every advantage. We are right against the canal while the European powers have an ocean between it and them.

"The present financial operations of the treasury disclose a degree of wealth and public confidence in the United States that has never before been reached in this or any other country," says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald.

It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription.
