In any event the party leaders are Blakeley, the druggist. tired of Noise Bryan. They would not dare to show this, if they were not sure that the people, too, are tired. It'l is significant that the friends of the Noise, now, are republican papers. They know a good thing for the party and they want to help keep the Noise to; the front. They are willing to aid him in circulating every protest he makes against the tendency of his party to get together and bury party differences. As Mr. Hanna said when some one told him that the Noise was trying to defeat the democratic nominee for mayor of St. Louis: "That's all right. He's a good thing for us. I hope he'll succeed."

These are dark days for his Noislets and he has begun to foresee more disaster. He is making a gallant struggle to prevent his slipping into oblivion, but the more he struggles the more he slides to the yawning gulf, and he does not slide with dignity at all. There is a general disposition among the public to laugh at him. "I see the Noise says so-and-so," remarks one man to another. "What!" ejaculates the other, "Still talking? Don't the fellow know he's dead?"

In all seriousness, the recently twice-defeated candidate for president is in imminent danger of coming to be regarded as a joke-almost like old Ben Butler. His paper's utterances are beginning to excite the same sort of interest that is shown toward Lieutenant Totten's calculations of the presence of the millennium, or that was felt some time ago about Piazzi Smyth's book of the pyramids. The Noise is only noise -- VOX ET PRETEREA NIHIL. The world goes about its business and leaves him howling in a wilderness populated chiefly by

There is, of course, a melancholy music in his howl, and one feels sorry for him in his vast loneliness. But he should know that the becoming thing for him to do would be to stop his howling and sccept the inevitable. He might study with profit the conduct of Grover Cleveland since he was marooned by his party. A man with a complaint, or We have an excellent line of Spring a hard luck story in politics, is a bore.
