chance, is specially adapted to clover culture, when given water.

We arrive at the postoffice kept by Mr. Stadleman, who owns many broad acres. Mr. S. believes in diversified farming and grows everything. His hay fields are pleasant to look upon, and the odor from new mown hay is borne to us on the mountain air. Old Adams is in full view before us and we pronounce him a fit companion for Mt. St. Helens or any other mountain. We drive in at the wide gateway of the Guler farm glad to be here and sure of a hearty welcome and a handclasp that is given us because they are really glad to see us. A supper fit for the gods and a nights rest under the odoriferous pines, and we are fit for catching and eating an hundred trout at least. The drive out from Guler lake is a pleasant one and must be taken to be appreciated.

Experiments With Bromus Enermus.

To a Baker City Democrat reporter Colonel Judson, industrial agent of the O. R. & N. Co., unbosomed himself on the subject of grasses, as follows:

"A few years ago the extensive tracts of land along the O. R. & N. Co.'s lines from Union clear through south to Huntington became denuded of vegetation as a result of constant grazing, and since then they have remained barren, except for small growths of filaree and wool grasses here and there. To allow such areas of fertile lands to go to waste was out of the question, and I commenced experimenting to find a restorative that would prove effective.

"Tests of grasses were made near Huntington, North Powder, Durkee, Baker City, Telocaset and on other lands tributary to the road between Union and Huntington, and the results which I have just learned, are most gratifying, and the problem has been solved.

"Formerly this land was a vast open country, thick with bunchgrass, and excellent for cattle ranges. At present it is virtually denuded of grasses, so barren in fact that it would be hard to find a 20-acre tract that would support one steer through the year. By regressing the ranges at a conservative cost, two acres will keep a steer, hence the desire of the management of the O. R. & N. Co. to make these lands pay tribute, and eventually make them the breeding ground for the raising of fine stock of the Pacific slope.

"How well they have progressed can be inferred from a letter just received from Telocaset, accompanied by samples of bromus eneremus and tall meadow oat grass. These samples were sent by R. Frazer, the O. R. & N. Co.'s agent at Telocaset.

"Three years ago the company fenced three acres of this range land, which was plowed, harrowed and seeded in the spring. In the fall a band of horses was turned in, and the grass cropped close to the ground, in fact as close as could be eaten by horses. The fence was left open so that the horses could go in and out at will. Next spring the opening was closed and the crop was something immense, standing 4 1/2 feet, and as nice a bunchgrass as one would desire to see in any country. Last year it was given the same treatment, and this year it will be cut for seed. The grass today is in full bloom, and a month will probably pass before the crop can be harvested.

"It has been demonstrated beyond doubt that the bromus will grow and thrive there, and the samples sent me are in full bloom. In about a month the crop will be ready for harvesting.

"These lands are the property of the government, and it is therefore doubtful if anything can be done in the way of regressing until they have been opened up for settlers."

When Mrs. S. E. Herbert, of Port Huron, Michigan, daughter of Mrs. Alex McLeod, of this city, was here on a visit to her mother and step-father, she received a telegram announcing the death of her only son, a young man of 18 years. No particulars were given and on receipt of the telegram Mrs. Herbert took the first train for home. From the Port Huron Herald of July 5th, we have since learned that the young man was drowned in Lake Huron on the Fourth. He was bathing in the lake with some companions, and being unable to swim got beyond his depth.

Mr. Hall was born in Canada of Scotch parents, who had emigrated from the old country in 1820. He came to California in 1852 and followed mining and saw-milling for the greater part of his active life. Eleven years ago he came to Oregon and has lived for the most part with his brother ever since. The Driveway to Trout Lake.

On leaving the beautiful steamer, Bailey Gatzert, at White Salmon landing, we drove to the picturesque home of Mr. Wyers, that overlooks the Columbia, where we were guests until the morning. Mr. and Mrs. Wyers have a pretty home, where neatness prevails and good meals are served to guests, and one really discusses the question in one's own mind as to whether or not it is not just as well to take the outing here under the wide spreading oaks.

We are awakened bright and early by the song of birds in the trees around us, and after partaking of a hearty breakfast are ready for an early start to Trout Lake. The hills are green with verdure that is spring like, and we go around the mountain high up above the White Salmon that winds its sinuous way down from the canyons and gorges from its mother glacier. We are delighted with the view, old to us, yet new, for it has a fresh charm each time we drive out this way. Old Hood, whose white head touches the clouds, to be by them caressed, stands south of us and we pause to gaze in awe at this kingly mountain, when a rosy blush mantles his furrowed cheeks, old as he is, until the whole mountain side is bathed in wine of roses as the sun creeps farther up over the hill tops.

We reach White Salmon falls, and again we are in raptures over the beauty of the scene before us. As the water falls it is of every tint reflected from sky, and foliage and rocks—from green to blue it sparkles and dashes and changes to lavender or rose, and then again to terre verte—and the millions of diamonds made by the spray as the sunlight touches them is a beautiful picture, and we hear its praises sung by every traveller who sees the White Salmon falls.

At 9 o'clock a. m. we have made the twelve miles to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gregory, where we have another breakfast. It is here, almost midway between Trout Lake and White Salmon, where the stage stops for dinner and, having once dined here, you will want to come again. It is worth a drive of twelve miles to get a meal there.

The road out to Trout Lake is delightfully shady, and we now plunge into deep forests whose trees are so tall we must "rubber neck" in order to see the tops. Two beautiful streams are reached and passed, where the water is clear and cold. Maiden-hair ferns and twin flowers weave carpets for the shady places, and the notes of the cat-bird and squirrel are heard as we drive on.

As we emerge from the shade we come to wild blackberries and of course we must pick them, and soon we have enough for berry pudding. As we reach more open timber an irrigating flume is seen, and by next year this timber land will be converted into farm land, producing wonders in clover meadows—this volcanic soil, or glacial soil, pur-
