

The San Francisco Argonaut tells this as a true story: "When the Transvaal was at its height, Paul Kruger sent a commissioner to England to find out if there were any more men left there. The commissioner wired from London to say that there were four million men and women 'knocking about the town'; that there was no excitement, and that men were begging to be sent to fight the Boers. Kruger wired back, 'Go north.' The commissioner found himself in Newcastle eventually, and wired to Kruger: 'For God's sake, stop that war! England is bringing up men from hell, eight at a time, in cages.' He had seen a coal mine."

The Sherman County Observer makes these consoling reflections for the benefit of the poor: "The poor man has his blessings no less than the rich man. Pickpockets never bother him, and road agents give him a wide berth. The tax collector never hounds him. Nobody tries to borrow, and no one asks him to endorse. He never runs head over heels in debt, and is not robbed or harassed by litigation. Burglars never invade his premises, and he sleeps in peace. When he dies nobody questions his will or attempts to confiscate his bones."

Congressman Babcock, of Wisconsin, who is said to have determined to introduce a bill for the revision of the Dingley tariff, has gone abroad to study the question. Perhaps when he returns he will feel as Congressman Overstreet of Indiana does about the matter. The latter has just returned from Europe and says that his observations abroad convince him "that the United States must continue to maintain a strong protective policy against foreign imports and at the same time seek greater openings for our surplus goods in the orient."

The progressive democratic party of Ohio say that "the gold standard democrats and republicans tell us that the country is in a prosperous condition; that the idle are employed, business is good and the people are contented. If this condition prevails then why try to push the republican party out of place and power, for has not that party furnished this condition?" The question is unanswerable.

P. P. McCully, editor of the Goldendale Journal, has accepted a position with a Klickitat county threshing machine outfit. This proves, what some people are slow to apprehend, that your country editor is fit to tackle anything. THE CHRONICLE congratulates Brother McCully on his deserved promotion.

An Eastern drummer recently went to Harney county to engage in the cattle business, and when he arrived at Burns he asked whether it would be cheaper to buy domestic cattle or gather up a herd of the wild animals on the mountains.
