

A Mother's Plain Words

"I suppose you will be astonished when I tell you that six years ago I was in a most dangerous condition with bronchitis and lung trouble, because you can see how well and strong I am now. The attack at that time caused terrible pain in my chest and lungs. I could hardly move, and to stoop caused intense suffering. Someone advised Acker's English Remedy, and I thought I would try it, although I had little faith in it. The first bottle gave great relief, and the second bottle made me the healthy woman I am today. My husband's lungs are weak also, and he cured himself with the same grand old remedy. Our boy and girl have both been saved by it from death by croup. I know this is so, for when they were attacked in the night I had a bottle in the closet, and by acting quickly that fatal malady was easily overcome. We always give it to the children when they have a cough or cold, and we would not be without it for anything. My sister will tell you also, if you ask her that it is a medicine that can always be depended upon for all the troubles of the breathing organs. I tell all our neighbors about Acker's English Remedy whenever I get a chance, and there are plenty of people around Mechanicsville, N. Y., where I live, who would not think of going to bed at night without a bottle of it in the house than they would of leaving their doors wide open. As I look at it, parents are criminally responsible when they allow their children to die under their very eyes with croup, because here is a certain remedy that will conquer the terrible monster every time."

(Signed) Mrs. FLOYD FOWLER.

In Favor of Vacations.

A Chicago paper estimates that ten million people in the United States will take vacations this summer and each vacation will cost on an average of $20. The question is then discussed whether or not the benefit derived from vacations is in proportion to the expenditure. Might not the money be used to better advantage? Two hundred million dollars would establish a good many libraries and endow a goodly number of institutions. The question is then asked if it would not be better to refrain from vacations one year and put all the money so saved to a more useful purpose.

On the other hand we might ask if the 65,000,000 who do not take vacations would not be better off at the end of the year if they should spend a portion of their incomes in vacation exercises.

Life lived on lines of strict economy becomes monotonous. Monotony dulls and enervates the mind. It paves the way to ennui, which is a mild form of disease. If one goes from a comfortable home whose environments lack variety, to a locality where comfort is a stranger, he may be better for the change. He is, of course, glad to get back to his home, and that sense of gladness is a mental tonic.

The statistician who shows a man may live on 15 cents a day is a public enemy. There would be no great harm in disseminating such knowledge if the disseminator could be absolutely certain that no one would make use of it. But if a man with an average American income should live on 15 cents a day his life would be colorless and unprofitable. What good would it do a man to deny himself the things to make life enjoyable to himself and a benefit to others, to the end that he might die rich? A statistician of a dyspeptic turn of mind once estimated the cost of keeping dogs. The man probably never experienced the pleasure of an intelligent dog's acquaintance. He certainly could not have made dogs a study. A dog will thrive on 15 cents a day, and no man ever invested that amount of money in the right kind of a dog who did not become convinced that there were such sentiments as devotion and gratitude. And there are times in most men's lives when faith in human nature is strengthened by manifestations of affection from an animal which can only express his feelings by a vigorous wagging of his tail.
