Getting "Vic" Trevitt Into Heaven.

A small pamphlet issued by a steamboat company operating the stern-wheel steamer Bailey Gatzert between Portland and The Dalles, on the Columbia river, contains a picture of the tomb of Victor Trevitt, on Memorial Island, an ancient burying ground, with a short account of the remarkable man whose body occupies that lonely mausoleum.

Victor Trevitt was an Oregon pioneer of 1849 and was very prominent and popular in that territory. He was a good democrat, a good citizen and a good, kind-hearted man, but when he came to consider the hereafter he was not sure that all these would be sufficient to admit him to heaven.

But, reasoned he, the Indians, on account of their invincible ignorance, will probably be allowed to pass in a body, without much scrutiny; and, if only with them, he might be allowed to move along with the crowd. Also, he thought that having always dealt kindly with the Indians, as well as with his white fellow citizens, the red men would intercede for him if the procession should be halted to inquire into his case.

Shortly after the erection of the monument held at The Dalles, and the delegates from the Willamette valley were going along on a special train when someone called out that "Vic" Trevitt's tomb was in sight. Everybody of course craned his neck to take in the view, and it was made the subject of conversation afterward, nearly all of the delegates having been intimate with "Vic," and being able to recount some incident illustrating his steadfast Democracy and universal kindness of heart.

After discussing his reasons for wishing to be buried there the conclusion was reached by the delegates that as "Vic," like Abou Ben Adhem, had loved his fellow men he was sure to get through the pearly gates even if the Indians did not.

"But," said one of the delegates, who had observed the massiveness of the stones composing the tomb and the massiveness of their fastenings, "what if 'Vic' could not get out of that when Gabriel blows his horn?"

Recognizing that future (possible) difficulty, the delegates, among whom were Governor Penoyer, afterward governor of Oregon; Semple, afterward governor of Washington; Bellinger, afterward United States district judge of Oregon; and Bonham, afterward minister to Siam—all then and there agreed that when the aforesaid horn should blow they would knock down the tomb and let "Vic" out.

This resolution was very magnanimous; for, though they were all certain that "Vic" would get passed by St. Peter all right, they confessed that they were not so sure of themselves.—Baker City Democrat.

Regular Monthly Council Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the city council was held last night, with Mayor Farley in the chair and Councilmen Stackelford, Kelly, Wakefield, Toomey and Lempe present.

A petition was presented by the firm of Sexton & Walther, asking to have the time of presenting bids for the construction of the Court street sewer extended to Friday, October 11th, at 7:30 p. m. As there was only one bid before the council, and this from a party outside the county, a resolution was unanimously agreed to in accordance with the prayer of the petition.

Councilmen Wakefield and Kelly were appointed as a special committee to superintend the work of moving the post house from its present location to the city property.

By a resolution the cistern at the intersection of Fourth and Union streets was condemned and the material was ordered to have it filled up.

By another resolution the lot now used as a pound at the foot of Washington street was rented by Messrs. Schanno and Maier to the city for one year for the sum of $10.

After auditing the claims against the city the council adjourned.
