

SENATOR MITCHELL'S VIEWS.

It is no surprise to us, says the Corvallis Gazette, but no less gratifying to find Senator J. H. Mitchell not only in line with the best thought and purposes of the party but fearlessly and clearly defining his position.

In an interview published in the Oregonian he says of tariff revision: "I firmly believe nothing congress could do would tend so strongly to the destruction of the good business conditions now prevailing as to enter upon a general revision of the tariff."

Labor, skilled and unskilled, never has been so fully employed nor so well remunerated as now. Prosperity is general, and since it is undoubtedly the result of republican policies and largely that of a protective tariff it would be most unwise for congress to disturb any of the conditions which have contributed to it.

Trusts, demagogues and free traders declare, are products of protection. If it can be ascertained that the tariff creates, fosters or sustains trusts the senator would put their product on the free list, but, he adds, "I apprehend that the tariff is not so responsible for the existence of the great trusts now in operation as many people suppose."

He favors reciprocity when it is truly of reciprocal benefit, but he calls attention to the fact that nearly one-half of the commodities we now import is already embraced by the free list.

Something must be done to restore and strengthen our merchant marine. Senator Frye's scheme may be the best means, and if so, he says: "I should not be frightened at the word 'subsidy,' but would support it."

He will favor the most drastic legislation within constitutional limitations for the suppression of anarchy and anarchists.

Oregon is fortunate in having an able, industrious and influential delegation in congress. They know what they want and usually obtain as great a quantity of it for the state as many more populous states receive.

The city of Eugene is making an effort to raise a bonus of $15,000 for a woolen mill and will probably succeed, and the Portland papers announce that another woolen mill is about to be erected in Portland. Come to think of it, isn't it strange that some of these woolen mill men don't fix their attention on The Dalles? There is no town in Oregon of the size of The Dalles that has anything like its advantages and facilities. It is the greatest wool market in Oregon, and the greatest primary wool market on the American continent.

to furnish all the power needed at much lower rates than it can be obtained by steam through the use of coal or wood. And, in addition to all these, the business men of the city are ready and willing to do the right thing towards a woolen mill or any other legitimate enterprise of the kind, or of any kind.

It is a pleasant thing to find rock-ribbed democracy approving anything that republicans do. This is from the Albany Democrat: "Reciprocity is a good deal nearer free trade than was the revenue reform advocated by Cleveland and the democratic party in 1888 and 1892. It's a wonder, therefore, that the extreme protectionist don't denounce the reciprocity as traitors—as they denounced the democrats when they advocated the same thing under another name."
