BLAME ECONOMICS

For having stolen $96,000 from the National City bank of Ottawa, Ill. Francis J. Carey, a 19 year old teller of the financial institution was yesterday sentenced by Judge K. M. Landis to serve one year in the national training school at Washington, D. C.

When Judge Landis deferred sentence and sent the lad home when his case came to trial, a great hue and cry went up. When Judge Landis from the bench declared that the boy in the prisoner's box was less guilty than his employers, the bank officials, some people gasped in surprise.

Indeed, action was taken in congress to impeach Judge Landis as a result of his lenient treatment of Francis J. Carey, the young man who had stolen a vast fortune in bonds.

But how near right is Judge Landis?

After all isn't crime largely a matter of economics. If this young man had been paid enough to support his mother and sister in comfort and have had a few dollars left each week for his personal needs, don't you think that there would have been much less chance of his stealing the bonds?

He would have been equipped to withstand temptation.

But Carey was paid $90 a month. Upon this sum he had to support his mother. He said that he bought many things for his sister. It is safe to say he had nothing left over for personal needs.

Underpaid, he was constantly subjected to the temptation to take big sums of money. He handled them daily.

And one day, the economic condition in which he found himself became intolerable. He no doubt reasoned that he was making money for his employers. He was doing their work efficiently. Yet he wasn't getting a decent living out of it and he was growing older day by day.

He took the bonds and sought to flee the country. Carey was rated as a sissy boy. Thus, it is evident that there was nothing vicious about him or inherently sinful.

Economics were at the bottom of this lad's crime. Economics are at the bottom of thousands of crimes. Criminals in some instances perhaps are born, but it seems equally true that in most cases they are made by economic conditions which dwarf their lives.

WHAT COLORS TELL

One's clothes reflect in large degree the temperament of the wearer. The cut of them and the style and the material are not the indications to the inner nature of the wearer. The color of the cloth, however, tells the world the person's characteristics.

Of course the language of colors does not always apply. Yet colors do indicate certain things.

Reds, oranges and vivid browns reflect inner fire, restlessness and easily aroused irritation. The wearer may smile ever so sweetly and murmur sweet words, but the colors have let out the secret.

Red creates ideas for warmth and irritation. It spurs thought. It makes for rapid action. Red puts the jazz into life.

Blue is a cold and non-aggressive element. It's sensations are of coolness, repose, restraint and formality.

Green is the color of rest. It is soothing to nerves and tends to quiet troubled minds.

Purple is the color of shadows and as such it denotes shade, sorrow, mysticism and dignity. It also indicates high emotions.

Colors truly speak a language and they tell a good deal about the wearers of them, especially if the colors have been selected consciously, and not accepted along with the style, material and general cut of the clothes.

LOOKING BACKWARD

(From The Chronicle, April 12, 1896) There are 1400 school children in Gilliam county, as learned by a recent enumeration. Wasco county has 3,900, an increase of nearly 1,100 in the last four years.

Mr. Lee Bolton of 15-Mile brought in a curiosity today in the shape of a double-headed calf, born dead on his ranch. The heads were perfect, and were attached to a normal body.

At a business meeting of the Epworth League the following officers were elected for the ensuing six months: W. A. Kirby, president; John Wood, vice-president; Edith Randall, second vice-president; Louise Ruch, third vice-president; Edwin Hill, fourth vice-president; John Thomas, secretary; Charles Campbell, treasurer; Nellie Sylvester, organist; Clara Nickelsen, assistant organist; John Parrot, chorister.

Wasco and Sherman counties are generously represented in the nominating conventions of both parties held in Portland this week. Here is the list:

Republican.

Representative to congress, second district, W. R. Ellis, Morrow.

Joint senators, John Mitchell, Wasco, and W. H. Moore, Sherman.

Representatives, B. S. Huntington, F. N. Jones, both of Wasco, District Attorney—A. A. Jayne, Gilliam.

Delegated to the national convention, Charles Hilton, Gilliam; John W. Meldrum, Clackamas; George Steel, Multnomah.

Electors, T. T. Geer, E. L. Smith, Wasco; J. F. Caples, S. M. Yoran, Supreme Judge, R. S. Bean.

Democratic.

THE FORUM

Editor, The Chronicle:—We notice that our city recorder reports that some people are building and repairing houses without a paid permit and that arrests may follow in the future. Since reading this item in your paper of recent date the writer has been thinking that our city is losing more money on dogs that have no paid licenses and do the city no good, and quite often a great amount of harm, than it is losing on people who spend their money with our local merchants for building material and help improve our city, even though they may attempt to build without a paid permit.

Here is where the rub comes in: both the buildings and the dogs are easy to find, and as the building will remain where found and the dog will not, why not arrest the dog owners as well as the owners of the building?

In this way we might collect a few more licenses, also help to keep many dogs off the streets.

A TAXPAYER.
