

TRANSPORTATION IS

that the only way to get around such a complex situation is to allow the president some discretion in applying tariff rates or providing what amounts to a bargaining tariff.

As a sign of recovery in domestic industry, there are already some evidences of improvement. The reduction in steel prices has not stimulated new business to the hoped-for extent, as yet, but this is hardly possible as long as freight rates are held at their present levels. Buyers believe there will be a lowering of rates in the not distant future and until these are known it is impossible to estimate costs of new construction so as to bring them within available funds. Undoubtedly there is a great deal of business in arrears that will be released as soon as the transportation problem is settled. The point is that as this point comes nearer, as it is doing every day, it is possible to foresee a revival of construction work. We can definitely rely upon the fact that the transportation problem will eventually be worked out so that this potential buying is a definite asset. It has already shown itself in advanced prices for iron in one or two localities, which may be regarded in some degree as symptomatic.

The revival of the automotive trades seems to be something more than a flurry and now has the appearance of something more permanent. It was one of the first to feel the effects of the depression and naturally should be one of the first to feel its revival. If so, it is significant. The fact that the people stopped buying automobiles was not due to lack of money, but rather to a desire to withhold expenditures until it could be seen what was going to happen. In other words, there was a loss of confidence and those who had money determined to hold on to it. If there is a willingness to spend money for automobiles once more it may be taken as an evidence of returning confidence on the part of the public, which is one of the very necessary elements in progress toward return to normal.

A great deal of fault is still being found with the retailer who has not deflated and it is properly charged that he is holding back business recovery. The reasons for his attitude are as various as the retailers themselves. He may be fully justified, or he may be impelled by the most selfish of motives. The fact is that he is holding back. Time, and the inevitable working of natural laws, will correct this trouble, regardless of his motives. It is the same way with the labor problem. There is bound to be a readjustment, regardless of the efforts of the labor unions to maintain war wages in peace times. The situation will adjust itself.

Taking a world wide view of conditions, therefore, it would seem that there is justification for the belief that the turn in the road has come.

COUNCIL WILL DISCUSS FACTS ABOUT MACADAM

Macadam street surfacing, its advantages and disadvantages, will be threshed out tomorrow night at the regular monthly meeting of the city council. Many property owners in the city have petitioned the council asking the city to pay 25 percent of the cost and the property owners the remaining 75 percent. The matter was first brought up at last month's council meeting, at which time the issue was tabled, after considerable discussion.

EXPLOSION WRECKS KERN COMPANY POWDER HOUSE

Sheriff Chrisman left for Mosier today to investigate the explosion which yesterday morning blew up the A. D. Kern construction company's powder house, a short distance out of Mosier. According to information received by Chrisman in a telephone conversation with officials of the construction company, a considerable quantity of powder was stored in the building at the time of the explosion. It is believed that either hoboes or mischievously inclined children set fire to the building, the fire igniting the powder after the perpetrators had escaped to a safe distance. No damage, other than the destruction of the building, was reported.

error of their ways by returning. They may be wedded to what they consider the gay life of the cities, or perhaps they are attached to men.

"In our police department here we continually receive requests to search for girls who have abandoned their homes in all parts of the United States. Similar requests are received in the police departments of all the metropolitan centers.

"Official reports from Los Angeles declare there are 500 girls missing from that city. The number is so large because of girls who are lured to the California city by promise of fame in the movies. Their dreams shattered, they disappear, wandering wherever the fates direct them."

A particularly tragic feature of the situation, according to Mrs. Vanwinkle, is the fact that half of the girls are not more than 16 or 17 years old.

"Many of these missing women become criminals, some are out-and-out prostitutes and most of them become sex offenders to a greater or less degree," Mrs. Vanwinkle continued. "But it is wrong to assume that they are all ignorant or of the morrow type, is popularly supposed. Many of them are women with college educations.

"It is a curious thing. Boys are led into crime by lure of adventure. One boy we handled recently possessed a passion for driving automobiles. He stole three cars that he might have the thrill of driving them. Finally, we got him a job as chauffeur and he's been good ever since.

"It's different with girls. Their entrance into crime is generally traceable to a man's influence. Crime, with them, follows sex offenses. They may steal for the love of a man; they wish to impress him by wearing attractive clothes. Or they may have left home because they thought, once when a man said he loved them, that he meant it."

"And women will go any length to protect their men.

Fraudulent movie concerns, promising girls fame and fortune, are responsible for the beginning of much female waywardness, Mrs. Vanwinkle said.

"These concerns may be found in nearly all the large cities," she said, "with ads in the local papers. We discovered one in Washington. We sent five or six of our police girls, in plain clothes, to apply for movie roles, but the 'manager' told them, one after another, that they wouldn't do. Finally we chose a large girl, one who does the rough work in shop-lifting cases. The 'movie magnate' said she'd do. He locked her in the room and began making advances to her. She pulled her gun and now he's under arrest, awaiting trial."

Many of the wandering girls "picked up" in Washington are demented persons, who have come here, bent upon seeing the president, according to Mrs. Vanwinkle. This type was especially prominent around inauguration time. They imagine they have important problems to take up with the administration.

"The White House police call us up," Mrs. Vanwinkle explained, "and we look after them."

thority that the French premier intends to press to a conclusion at the present conference the matters of Germany's failure to disarm and her dereliction in other parts of the treaty, as well as to solve the reparations problem.

One of the strongest arguments he has in advocating the army's immediate march to the Ruhr is the fact that Germany has failed to comply with the military terms and in this matter he has France solidly behind him—wearied of war and fighting, and ever ready to suspect the motives of Great Britain in hanging back on the occupation of the Ruhr, the idea being that British commercial interests and bankers are apprehensive lest this occupation injure Great Britain's export coal trade.

MOVIE MOVES

"The Nut," Starring Fairbanks Coming to Casino Wednesday
An optical feast is promised to picture patrons when Douglas Fairbanks' new photo-feature, "The Nut," opens next Wednesday, for a two-day run at the Casino theater.

According to advance reports regarding this production, the public may expect to view a real celluloid innovation. For originality and novelty of treatment, this picture is said to excel anything yet attempted by the ingenious "Doug." Although no announcement has been made of the exact nature of the photoplay, it is understood to provide a new type of characterization for the popular star. A statement issued from the New York office of the United Artists, which is releasing this screen offering, conveys the information that "The Nut" deals with the adventures of an eccentric young inventor who falls in love with a girl in New York's historic Greenwich Village. "Doug's" adventures as a gay Lothario are said to involve some of the most amazing and comical complications ever shown upon the screen. Much of the "business" for the story, as well as data relating to the "locations" was gathered personally by Fairbanks during his stay in New York just after his return from Europe last fall.

With Kenneth Davenport, author of the piece, the star lived two weeks in the famous Bohemian quarters of the metropolis and made an intimate study of those eccentric and talented people who live in the Village.

It is believed that as a result of these observations the picture-going public will be given the most lifelike interpretation of the characteristics and mannerisms of these remarkable folk that has ever yet been shown.
