

THE DALLES HIGH SCHOOL

By Ralph Hallyburton

"Well, how are you today? What are you doing up at school? Anything? What have you got up there anyway?"

Were you ever asked these questions? I was, and I can't say that my questioner wasn't a bit enlightened when I left him pondering over several new ideas or new conceptions of D. H. S.

"To begin with," I answered, "I feel fine." This was a trifle optimistic for I had just finished a six weeks' quiz, given the last period in the day. "As to what I'm doing, it would take me a very long time to tell you but my motto is, 'get something out of each day's lessons.' Something that will make for progress. If it's a theory I'm studying I try to link it up with some practical idea. If it's a new method, I try it. If it's English literature I am studying, I look for some inspirational work such as biographies or good stories written by recognized authors. And so on through all my studies, I search for the good in them."

"To hear you talk," interrupted my friend, "one would think you are either the moder student or you just naturally have the gift for gab."

"You're rather plain-spoken, aren't you?" I offered. "However, I don't think your criticism is quite accurate. I'm not the model student and neither have I any ambition for the field of oratory. On the contrary I have two ears which I try to give the preference. There is always interest in school work if you're looking for it. In answer to your third query concerning our work, listen hard and I'll hang a few things 'on the end of your nose.'"

"Never mind," he broke in, "I know what you've got up there. It's a bunch of school girls for teachers, a couple of vocational courses, two little positions which tickle the vanity of two equally small professors, and several classical and commercial 'blind alley' courses."

"Hold on, here. Let me ask you a question. When did you graduate from The Dalles high school?"

"I didn't graduate from that cemetery, thank heaven."

"Well, why didn't you go to some other school then?" I inquired.

"Oh, I don't know. Probably because I—well—I didn't want to, I guess."

"That's a good reason, I'll admit, but just because you lost interest in your school work and quit—I remember it was just a year ago—is no reason why you should condemn the school. Do you know that we have one of the best university trained faculties obtainable? Teachers who are heads of departments are especially trained for the work. We have a school library with hundreds of reference books and plenty of good magazines, a printing department which is the best high school print-shop in the state, a physics laboratory, a manual training department and a course in mechanical drawing. In addition to the classical, commercial and scientific courses we have a domestic science department with a subordinate course in millinery. Music is not neglected either. There are a number of music classes, an orchestra and both boys' and girls' glee clubs.

"Do you know that more money was spent for luxuries, silk shirts and sox, and so on, by fellows like you and the rest of the great army of extravagants, in 1920 than we have spent for education since the beginning of history? That's saying a good deal for the colonists in the very beginning apportioned a certain amount of land for public schools. Which army do you want to belong to, the army of spendthrifts or the student army? It is no disgrace to be poor but there is no excuse for ignorance. There are too many libraries to allow an excuse. Statistics show that out of 5,000,000 persons with no schooling only 31 attained distinction. Of 30,000,000 who have elementary training, 808 attained distinction. From 2,000,000 with a high school education 1245 rose to prominence, while of 1,000,000 college educated, 5768 became famous. So from this we see that the person with no education has one chance in one hundred fifty thousand of making a name for himself, with an elementary training he has four times the chance, with high school education eighty-seven times the chance and with a college education, eight hundred times the chance. Now I ask you, friend, what are your chances? Eight hundred to one or one to eight hundred? The Dalles high school offers you an opportunity. Think it over."

And I left him.

LAUGHS ARE HIS HITS

American baseball fans in all of their serious rooting like to relax in a good laugh occasionally. Nick Altrock, former world champion pitcher, but now baseball's most unique character, is proving it so year after year. Once again he is back on the coaching line with the Washington American League club, cutting funny capers and making thousands roar with laughter. Altrock, as pitcher on the Chicago White Sox years ago, pitched Comiskey's team to a world title over the Cubs in world series.
